Selected Poems

Robert Bloomfield

Revised And Enlarged Edition

TRENT EDITIONS

Robert Bloomfield

Selected Poems

Trent Editions

Trent Editions aims to recover and republish landmark texts in handsome and affordable modern editions.

Poetry Recoveries series
Reconnecting poets to their own time and ours
Series Editor: Professor Stan Smith (Nottingham Trent University)
William Barnes, Poems, ed. Valerie Shepherd (1998)
Robert Bloomfield, Selected Poems, ed. Goodridge & Lucas (1998, revised 2007)
John Clare, The Living Year, 1841, ed. Tim Chilcott (1999)
John Dyer, Selected Poetry and Prose, ed. John Goodridge (2000)
Randall Swingler, Selected Poems, ed. Andy Croft (2000)
Frank Thompson, Selected Poems, ed. Dorothy and Kate Thompson (2003)
Charles Churchill, Selected Poetry, ed. Adam Rounce (2003)
Nancy Cunard, Poems, ed. John Lucas (2005)

American Recoveries
Key texts from the cultural memory of North America
Radical Fictions
Radical novels and innovative fiction, with an emphasis on writers of the British Isles.
Early Modern Writing (silver covers)
Recovering radical manuscript and printed texts from the cultural margins
Postcolonial Writings (maroon covers)
Radical voices of the colonial past, speaking to the postcolonial present
Radical Recoveries
The history and development of working-class, radical and popular print culture
Trent Essays (white covers)
Writers on the craft of writing

For further information please contact Trent Editions, English Division, Arts & Humanities, Nottingham Trent University, Clifton Lane, Nottingham NG11 8NS, or use your internet search engine to find our web page.

'The excellent Trent Editions...' (Boyd Tonkin, The Independent)

Robert Bloomfield

Selected Poems

Revised and Enlarged Edition

Edited by John Goodridge and John Lucas
With an Introduction by John Lucas

Trent Editions

2007

First published by Trent Editions, 1998
Revised and enlarged edition, 2007

Trent Editions
English Division
School of Arts and Humanities
Nottingham Trent University
Clifton Lane
Nottingham NG11 8NS

http://human.ntu.ac.uk/research/trenteditions/mission.html

Typeset by Roger Booth Associates, Hassocks, West Sussex BN6 8AR

Printed by Antony Rowe Limited, Bumper's Farm Industrial Estate, Chippenham, Wiltshire SN14 6LH

ISBN 1-84233-121-3

For Mahendra Solanki

CONTENTS

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

Our priority in this selection of Bloomfield, given his general neglect and the lack of modern editions of his poetry, was to fit in as much poetry as we could. This extended second edition therefore now includes, as well as The Farmer's Boy, the whole of Good Tidings and May Day with the Muses, and Book III of The Banks of Wye. (These last three were represented by excerpts in the first edition.) There is a selection of other material, with an emphasis on the narrative poetry we regard as having been greatly undervalued. The poems are grouped to indicate the general sequence of publication in Bloomfield's lifetime and incorporate posthumously published texts in the approximate order of composition. Bloomfield was an attractive prose writer, so we include some of the prefatory materials he wrote for various editions of his work, which speak eloquently of his hopes and fears. Like his younger contemporary John Clare, Bloomfield is an accessible poet, and we have kept our editorial matter to a minimum, preferring to be more generous with his words than with ours.

We are grateful to the British Library (Department of Manuscripts), the Houghton Library at Harvard University, Northamptonshire Central Library, and Nottingham Trent University's Clifton Library for allowing us to consult materials in their keeping; to Ronald Blythe, David Fairer, Bob Heyes, Bridget Keegan, Scott McEathron, Hugh Underhill and the late Barry Bloomfield for their help, and to Catherine Byron and Alison Ramsden for work on proof-reading and checking the text. We are grateful to our colleagues at Nottingham Trent University for their support, and we warmly thank our former colleague Dick Ellis (currently Professor of English and American Studies at the University of Birmingham) for his support, and for his inspiring and pioneering work in establishing Trent Editions.

INTRODUCTION

The publication in 1800 of The Farmer's Boy made Robert Bloomfield famous. By the time of his death, some 23 years later, much of that fame had gone, and although he was by no means forgotten, none of his later publications could rival the critical and financial success of his first work.[1] Nor in the years following his death did his reputation show any signs of recovering its early splendour. Auden famously remarked that some bad poets may be undeservedly remembered but that no good poet is undeservedly forgotten. This may be true in the long run but Bloomfield's wait for recognition has been longer than most. During the nineteenth century, editions of his poems went on being reprinted. My own copy of his Works, dated 1867, is by no means either the first or last of the single volume 'Complete Editions' brought out by George Routledge and Sons. Bloomfield must have had his readers.

But just who these readers were is something of a mystery. They certainly don't seem to have included professional poets. I can find no evidence that his work made an impact on Browning, Tennyson, or any of the noteworthy poets of the latter part of the nineteenth century. William Barnes, who was twenty-three when Bloomfield died, must surely have known the work. Yet as far as I know Barnes does not register the fact. At the end of my copy of The Works of Robert Bloomfield comes a clutch of 'Poetical Tributes', the first of which is an 'Epistle', said to be 'From Roger Coulter, of Dorsetshire, to his friend Giles Bloomfield, the Suffolk Farmer's Boy.' It begins:

> VRIEND GILES,
> When vust I heard thy tunevul voice,
> I stood ameaz'd, an' star'd, and gaped awoy: —
> That can't be Stephen, Ned, nor Hodge, I cried;
> When some oone zaid—'why, that's the Zuffolk Buoy.'

'Roger Coulter' is in fact the poet William Holloway (1761-1854), author of The Peasant's Fate (1802). His poem to Giles had first been published in the Monthly Mirror in 1802, four years after Holloway had left his native Weymouth for London. The Wessex dialect is thus his own rather than that of Barnes, the most famous of the west country dialect poets. Bernard Barton's 'On The Death of Robert Bloomfield', on the other hand, was clearly written after the poet's death. Barton, known as 'the Quaker Poet', ends his elegiac stanzas with the hope that 'long may guileless hearts preserve / The memory of thy verse and thee.' Barton may not have intended the note of condescension, but there is here a tacit admission that Bloomfield's poetry is unlikely to have lasting appeal for sophisticated readers. 'Peace to the bard whose artless store / Was spread for Nature's humblest child.' With friends like Barton Bloomfield hardly needed enemies.

This is not to say that Barton damaged Bloomfield's posthumous reputation by unintentionally writing him off as a naïf. Later writers are unlikely to have gone to Barton to find out how they should regard Bloomfield. It's more the case that Barton was voicing what became a commonplace assumption. And from naïf to neglected proved to be a short step. The only exception seems to have been W.H. Hudson who, according to Edward Thomas, liked 'a vast range of English poets from Swinburne to Bloomfield.'[2] But by the time Thomas was writing this, in A Literary Pilgrim in England (1917), editions of Bloomfield's Works had long dried up. As a result, and with due allowance made for a selection produced in 1971 by William Wickett and Nicholas Duval and published by a small press, Terence Dalton Ltd. of Lavenham, Suffolk, the present selection is the first of any importance to appear in the last fifty years.

It was The Farmer's Boy which made Bloomfield famous and even brought him money. And it was probably with that poem uppermost in mind that Barton claimed Bloomfield, 'though free from classic chains, / Our own more chaste Theocritus.' Bloomfield is here praised for being a 'natural' poet. He is free of what Edward Young had years earlier called the encumbrances of the 'scholar poet', those chains of learning and, therefore, 'the notions of others'. Bloomfield is instead a type of the natural genius: 'crossing all public roads into fresh untrodden ground.'[3] He is therefore assimilable to the tradition from which Burns misleadingly claimed to come and whose starting point was typically thought of as being Theocritus. Theocritus, the first pastoral poet, told the truth. Later poets, such as Virgil, who self-consciously acknowledged a debt to Theocritus, were by comparison, artificial. So at least ran a line of argument through the eighteenth century. Hence Richard Polwhele's remark, made as early as 1692, that 'The pieces of Theocritus are the result of his own accurate observation, he described what he saw and felt. His characters, as well as his scenes, are the immediate transcript of nature.' This claim, which Polwhele makes in the Dissertation and Notes to his two volume Idyllia, Epigrams and Fragments of Theocritus, Bion and Moschus, establishes a template for later assumptions about Theocritus.[4] And this is why John Clare called Bloomfield 'the English Theocritus.'

I have elsewhere suggested that when Clare uses this phrase he means to celebrate Bloomfield as the true recorder of English rural life in its pre-lapsarian state, that is, before enclosure came 'and made the poor a slave.'[5] Here, we need to understand that The Farmer's Boy is by no means as innocent of art as Barton and Clare imply. Bloomfield was a very self-conscious artist. In later life, when he was casting about for ways of easing his financial difficulties, he considered that 'some Country tales, and spiced with love and courtship, might yet please, for Rural life by the art of Cooking may be made a relishing and highly flavour'd dish, whatever it may be in reality.'[6] And you cannot read very far in The Farmer's Boy without recognising that it is an extremely successful blend of several kinds of rural poem. One such kind is what we might call neo-Theocritean poetry, the most distinguished example of which is Thomson's The Seasons, although Stephen Duck's The Thresher's Labour is crucial in the attention it pays to unglamorous, daily work. Hence, to take one example among many, Bloomfield's account in 'Spring' of the 'clatt'ring Dairy-Maid immers'd in steam, / Singing and scrubbing midst her milk and cream, / [who] Bawls out, "Go fetch the Cows!"' (ll. 165-7), where pastoral 'sweetness'—artifice—is dispelled by terms such as 'clatt'ring' and 'bawls'. Hence, too, Bloomfield's description, also in 'Spring', of the ridge-and-furrow method of ploughing:

> But, unassisted through each toilsome day,
> With smiling brow the plowman cleaves his way,
> Draws his fresh parallels, and, wid'ning still,
> Treads slow the heavy dale, or climbs the hill. (ll. 71-5)

John Barrell helpfully points out that this method of ploughing was accomplished by 'ploughing a land down its centre-length, and turning then in an ever-widening arc at the ends of the lands, and throwing the mould of ploughing soil always towards the centre of the land.'[7]

Yet we are entitled to feel that the source for the propriety of these lines on ridge-and-furrow ploughing is less Theocritus than Virgil. And certainly the kinds of practical husbandry addressed in the Georgics are replicated in The Farmer's Boy, as for example where Bloomfield speaks of Giles foddering cattle on 'The sweet nutritious turnip' ('Winter', l. 24), a root vegetable which with the increasingly widespread use of crop rotation, had become part of the staple winter provision for beasts. This is not to say that Bloomfield would have read Virgil or Theocritus—and certainly not in the original. His formal education was scanty and by his mid-teens, after some years working on a farm, he was in London, helping his brother at the trade of cobbling. It is, however, apparent that as a young man he must have studied Duck,

Thomson, and their many imitators, as well as Goldsmith, whose Deserted Village is another felt presence in The Farmer's Boy.

To put matters this way is perhaps to give the impression that Bloomfield's poem is a kind of palimpsest. If so, I need to remark that The Farmer's Boy is remarkably successful in adapting a variety of styles and genres in order to make a poem which, if not sui generis, brings real distinction to the various traditions out of which it emerges. It is easy to point these traditions out. And, given that Bloomfield 'had worked hard to learn the proper language of poetry', we can as easily identify sources for particular words and phrases.[8] The 'grateful scene' of the farmyard in 'Spring' (l. 185) has its source in Book Four of Paradise Lost ('Cheer'd with the grateful smell old Ocean smiles'); the description of advancing Spring spreading 'Flow'rs of all hues, with sweetest fragrance stor'd; / Where'er she tread, Love gladdens every plain' (ll. 272-3) comes from Pope's 'Where'er you tread, the blushing Flow'rs shall rise, / And all things flourish where you turn your Eyes'; and behind the 'ruffian winds' that cannot 'shake' the waters in 'Autumn' (l. 26) are those 'rough winds' that shake the darling buds of May.

So one could go on. To do so, however, would not diminish Bloomfield's accomplishment. The Farmer's Boy most adeptly blends various stylistic registers. Moreover, Bloomfield's serviceable couplets, end-stopped though they mostly are, have sufficient flexibility to allow him to snap rhymes neatly shut or, more usually, develop small narratives. He apparently first thought of writing the poem in unrhymed verse after the manner of Thomson, whose Miltonic style abounds throughout, but changed his mind because he composed most of it in his head while working at his cobbling trade and found it easier to commit the poem to memory once he'd chosen to rhyme it (see his remarks on this on p. 21).

This isn't surprising. Nor should we be surprised to find that The Farmer's Boy feels to be made up of small narrative blocks—it might be better to call them sequences—which between them illustrate seasonal life on the farm. Such life is often presented as 'simple', a word Bloomfield uses on more than one occasion. When he does so he seems to be assuring his readers that the rural scene is preferable to that of the Metropolis, which in 'Spring' he more or less anathematises as the place where 'Art':

> Her poring thousands stows in breathless rooms,
> Midst pois'nous smokes and steams, and rattling looms;
> Where Grandeur revels in unbounded stores;
> Restraint, a slighted stranger at their doors! (ll. 239-42)

'Art' means manufacture but it also means Artifice as the enemy of simplicity. The lines are subtle, witty, and deeply hostile to the city. The 'poring thousands' are those who bend to the machines, but we must also feel that they pore over delusive dreams of success. 'Breathless rooms', while literally meaning workplaces shut against light and air also, by transferred epithet, suggests rooms where gulled workers are 'breathless' with excitement at their vision of golden futures. It is for this, we might even think, that they have poured into the metropolis. But the gap between rich and poor is epigrammatically caught in the disdain shown by Grandeur for Restraint. That couplet sets up a kind of anti-pastoral. The unbounded 'stores'—the word inevitably suggests granary or rooms teeming with food—are closed to the 'slighted stranger', that hallowed supplicant or beggar, who according to the custom of the country, is never sent away empty handed ('Where comes no guest, but is allowed to eat, / Without his fear, and of the lord's own meat', as Jonson had put it in 'To Penshurst').

The claims of hospitality are on more than one occasion invoked in The Farmer's Boy. The opening lines of 'Winter' extol the virtues of that 'bond of amity and social love' (l. 8), where it is suggested that such love extends even to animals: 'To more than man this generous warmth extends, / And oft the team and shiv'ring herd befriends' (ll. 9-10). Here, 'generous warmth' is syntactically detached from human agency. It is simply 'there'. But in an all-important passage in 'Summer' Bloomfield places it in the context of the 'long-accustom'd feast of Harvest-Home' (l. 290). Here, the 'careful dame, / And gen'rous host invite their friends around'. In this extended passage (lines 287-332) Bloomfield provides what might be called an archetypal image of shared 'Plenty', which operates as a definitive if implied rebuke to the distinction between rich and poor of the Metropolis.

But it then turns out that 'Distinction' has now infested the country. For the vision Bloomfield has summoned up he consigns to 'days long past' (l. 333). Now, 'refinement' has left the peasant 'distanc'd in the mad'ning race' (ll. 337, 336). The social plan, 'that rank cements, as man to man' (l. 342), has been swept away by new considerations of rank, new forms of separation. As a result, 'Wealth flows around him, Fashion lordly reigns / Yet poverty is his, and mental pains' (ll. 343-4). Once the matter is put in those terms it must seem that the country and city are part of a social continuum rather than being distinguishable by the greater naturalness or morally sanctioned bonding between classes of the former. And to say this brings me to the question of Bloomfield's politics.

There can be no doubt that for the most part Bloomfield adopts that attitude towards rural circumstance which can be called conservative or which at all events sees in mutuality the 'cement' which holds the ranks together. During the 1780s, when he was working in London, he and his brother would go to hear Joseph Fawcett preach. Fawcett, a unitarian minister, used his Meeting House to lecture his audience, among whom were Wordsworth and Coleridge, on issues of the day, including the need for common ownership of the land. Robert Bloomfield was apparently much struck by Fawcett, yet it does not appear that his views were greatly modified by Fawcett's radicalism. Or should we see in his typical setting of poems in the past an implicit contrast with the unsatisfactory present? Perhaps. For, as I have previously noted, when Bloomfield writes about the present he tends to compare it unfavourably with the past. Yet he rarely links his criticisms of rank and new wealth to the grabbing of land. When, for example, he tells of Giles's work as shepherd, in 'Spring', he reports:

> Small was his charge: no wilds had they to roam;
> But bright inclosures circling round their home. (ll. 285-6)

By 'bright inclosures' I assume Bloomfield has in mind variegated hedgerows inside which the sheep are 'roving, ever seeking thee / Enchanting spirit, dear Variety!' ('Spring', ll. 289-90) This is a long way from Clare's view of enclosure. For him, it was 'vile', and so far from tolerating let alone encouraging, variety, it testified to the dread uniformity of 'little minds' which between them obliterated the divine 'glow' of nature. No brightness there—or indeed in Bloomfield's own prose 'Anecdotes and Observations', published after his death:

> Inclosing Acts! I do not much like the rage for them. They cut down the solemn, the venerable tree, and sometimes plant another,—not always; like a mercenary soldier, who kills more than he begets. (Remains, II, pp. 53-54)

We might wonder, though, why Clare so delighted in Bloomfield's work, why he was so sure that the older poet was indeed the English Theocritus. The answer is twofold. One, Bloomfield was writing about rural circumstance before enclosure had done its vilest work, or at all events Clare could think of him as doing so. It's true that on at least one occasion Bloomfield slips into the rhetoric we more usually associate with Clare. In his tale 'The Broken Crutch', a particular favourite of Clare's which appeared in the collection Wild Flowers (1806), the narrator savages:

> This scythe of desolation call'd 'Reform'...
> I hate the murderous axe; estranging more

The winding vale from what it was of yore,
Than e'en mortality in all its rage,
And all the change of faces in an age.
'Warmth', will they term it, that I speak so free;
They strip thy shades, thy shades so dear to me!
In Herbert's days woods cloth'd both hill and dale;
But peace, Remembrance! let us tell the tale. (ll. 68, 71-78)

Radstock called Clare's attack on enclosure 'radical slang'. He might well have applied the same phrase to Bloomfield's 'warmth', even though Bloomfield doesn't go so far as to identify who 'they' are who wield the murderous axe. Nor am I clear what he means by 'Reform'. What is clear is that Bloomfield is outraged by the licensed vandalism of those who destroy the look of his native place.

But this moment is remarkable because it is so unlike Bloomfield's usual procedure of focussing on a past which he regards with unabashed delight and yet which is never celebrated in a manner either condescending or belittling. This has especial point for both Rural Tales (1802) and Wild Flowers. Take for example one of the best known of the Tales, and one in which Clare particularly delighted. 'Richard and Kate; or Fair-Day, a Suffolk Ballad' can hardly be thought of as a grainily realistic account of rural life. Apart from anything else, the chances of the average couple in rural work reaching a hale and hearty old age, of all their children growing to adulthood, and of all of them marrying and producing their own full complement of healthy children, are slight. Crabbe was nearer the truth of the matter when, in The Village, he asked the sentimental townee in search of the picturesque to imagine life within the aesthetically pleasing cottage:

Go, if the peaceful cot your praises share,
Go look within, and ask if peace be there;
If peace be his—that drooping weary sire,
Or theirs, that offspring round their feeble fire;
Or hers, that matron pale, whose trembling hand
Turns on the wretched hearth th'expiring brand!

This might well be claimed for Theocritean realism: an immediate transcript of nature. But then it could be argued—and in a sense Clare does argue—that Crabbe's desire to dissolve the sentimental evasions of the picturesque lead him into his own evasions.[9] His villagers aren't allowed to speak. He speaks for them. And he presents them as objects of at best pity. Their lives are apparently entirely circumscribed and conditioned by work and their lousy living conditions. Yet after all Fair Days are an intrinsic part of the functioning rituals of rural life. And in Bloomfield's poem the ritual is made intrinsic to the lives of those who speak the poem—Richard and Kate, whose Suffolk dialect is sharply distinguished from that of the 'polite' narrator, with his reliance on what might be called 'literary' language. ('Kate scorn'd to damp the generous flame / That warm'd her aged Partner's breast').

'Richard and Kate' is, as the title of the volume in which it appears makes plain, a 'rural tale'. Wordsworth calls his great poem 'Michael' a Tale, and also a 'history / Homely and rude'. In his Dictionary, Johnson gives as the prime meaning of Tale: 'A narrative; a story. Commonly a slight or petty account of some trifling or fabulous incident.' And as a second definition, he offers 'Oral relation'. 'Tale' is thus identified with what for want of a better phrase I will call folk culture. Johnson's near contempt for such culture can be felt in his regarding tales as 'slight' and 'petty'; and as he quotes Macbeth's 'tale / Told by an idiot' it may be that he feels tales find a natural home in the society of country bumpkins. (Of The Winter's Tale he remarks in his Notes to Shakespeare's Plays that it is 'with all its absurdities, very entertaining'.) That Wordsworth was aware of this sense of tales as unworthy of 'high' culture is plain from his apparently defensive remark about the tale of Michael, that 'although it be a history / Homely and rude, I will relate the same / For the delight of a few natural hearts' (my italics). 'Natural hearts': so much for those who can see little merit in a tale.

Tale telling is deeply inwoven into cultures where the printed word does not predominate. 'Blue-foot travellers' is the phrase reserved in the West Indian islands for those who have come some way in order to tell their tales and who are thus accorded especial hospitality. In the West of Ireland, as in rural Greece, a chair is still kept for the wanderer who may appear and who will bring with him a stock of tales to delight the household and any others who are called in to form the body of listeners. Such tales may well seem to deal in the 'trifling or fabulous'. It could be said that 'The Fakenham Ghost' deals in both. But it also could and should be said that Bloomfield's Rural Tales—both in the volume that bears that name and elsewhere—draw on a cultural heritage whose riches lie in their being rooted, as ballads are, in material which is endlessly repeatable and thus shareable. This is the oral tradition. Moreover, as many of them are 'histories' of local people and places they make a community known to itself: they give it identity. Such identity is bound up with names of people, of places, of incidents, and, it should go without saying, of speech habits, idiom, of the real language of men.

As Dickens and Joyce above all should remind us, city culture can sustain tales quite as well as rural culture. But at the end of the eighteenth century most cities were new. Rural life, on the other hand, was old but changing, and the changes were coming with increased rapidity and for many were experienced as deeply disturbing. Time's alteration included the obliteration of what was nevertheless the tangible past. Tales were a means of sustaining a past which in all other ways had vanished. 'Where does the present go when it becomes the past?' Wittgenstein asked. Into tales is one answer. Hence, I suspect, the renewed interest in narrative poetry shown in our own day by such Australian poets as Philip Hodgins and Les Murray, both of them writing from rural circumstance. Hence, too, the narrative poems of the American poets David Mason and Andrew Hudgins, who want to reconstitute or, it may be more accurate to say, preserve a sense of their local culture, its social history, as existing beyond the metropolis.

Tales can of course degenerate into sentimental impositions on the actualities of history: bush ballads and cowboy poems are today's equivalents of much fake-ballad poetry of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries (The kind Dickens has in mind in Bleak House when he causes Skimpole, who loves the 'artless', to sing of a poor country boy condemn'd to roam). This is not, however, an accusation that can be fairly levelled at Bloomfield. I don't even think he can be accused of having written with an eye to the main chance in Good Tidings: or, News from The Farm, his poem praising Jenner's discovery of vaccination against smallpox (1804), or in The Banks of Wye (1811). The former isn't hanging onto the coat-tails of Erasmus Darwin, who had undoubtedly popularised scientific subject-matter as material for poetry, but who has nothing of Bloomfield's concern with the horrors of disease. Darwin is an enlightenment poet. In his writings, Nature unfolds its great plan. For Bloomfield, on the other hand, the horrors of smallpox aren't to be softened by thoughts of an ultimately benevolent deity. As to The Banks of Wye, while I wouldn't disagree with John Barrell when he calls it a 'picturesque poem,' it should be noted that Bloomfield handles with both suppleness and ease the octosyllabic couplets he probably inherited from Dyer's poem Grongar Hill (1726), which had established a kind of template for future topographical cum picturesque poems.

This is perhaps the appropriate moment to remark that Bloomfield is technically adroit in handling a wide variety of verse forms, from the narrative couplets of The Farmer's Boy, through the intricate stanza patterns of 'The Widow to her Hour-Glass', ballad measures, sonnets, songs (also intricately patterned), to the unrhymed pentameters of 'To A Spindle'. This last, together with 'To My Old Oak Table', exhibits Bloomfield's assured handling of what Wordsworth would call 'domestic affections'. I doubt, however, that Wordsworth was in any sense a source for these fine poems.[10] Cowper is a far more likely influence. Although there are precedents for his 'On the Receipt of my Mother's Picture out of Norfolk, the gift of my Cousin, Ann Bodham',[11] Cowper's is undoubtedly a new kind of meditative poem, in which memory called up by an object testifies to the deep emotional bonding between the object's original owner—friend, relative—and the poet who now contemplates it. Wordsworth learnt from Cowper in this respect and so, too, did Clare, although in Clare's case the friend or relative is usually the land itself, and the land's one-time ownership of, say, Swordy Well or Langley Bush, prompts memories that lead both to elegy and to poems of bitter protest over lost possessions.

Despite Bloomfield's recording his mother's fear of 'Winter, Old Age, and Poverty', his poem is in no sense one of protest. Her life and death are gathered into a measured statement which is almost a memento mori:

> —Half finish'd? 'Tis the motto of the world!
> We spin vain threads, and strive, and die
> With sillier things than spindles on our hands! (ll. 26-7)

'To a Spindle' is a triumph of what Donald Davie memorably called 'the chastity of poetic diction'. Its restraint and economy of metaphor establish a tone of scrupulous regard for its subject—which is ultimately with how to live a life of good intent. And if this makes the poem sound at all pietistic I need to add that its sweetness has nothing at all to do with pietism. The same may be said of 'To My Old Oak Table', in which the loving, intimate familiarity of address, of murmuring, sounds a note which is to my ear at least quite new in English poetry, although it is one which will be picked up and adapted by Clare, in for example 'To A Fallen Elm', and, later, by Thomas Hardy. These two poems of Bloomfield's are of unique accomplishment and value. That they should be absent from virtually all anthologies of poetry of the period is quite simply a scandal.

The same holds true of May-Day with the Muses. This was Bloomfield's last substantial work, published in 1822, the year before he died, and written at a time of personal distress. He was physically in poor shape, and as his wife seems to have given most of his by no means considerable income into the unsafe keeping of Joanna Southcott's followers, Bloomfield had been reduced to near poverty. This may be why the poem has an elegiac feel about it. The community with which it deals is not so much set in the past as consigned to it. In this, it seems to develop out of 'The Broken Crutch', a tale about a marriage between a gentleman of honour and a poor girl which is very pointedly set in what is made to feel an already remote moment of social history, even though it is within living memory of the narrator. 'The moat remains; the dwelling is no more! / Its name denotes its melancholy fall, / For village children call the spot "Burnt-Hall"'. So we are told of the hall to which Herbert Brooks, the hero of 'The Broken Crutch' brings Peggy, his wife. What we don't however know is why the hall was burnt. An accident? Because Brooks' fortune had gone? Is this the work of nature or of man?[12]

In May-Day with the Muses we meet Sir Ambrose Higham, owner of Oakly Hall, 'in his eightieth year', who honours the muses and who has, we are told, found sparks of genius 'In many a local ballad, many a tale, / As wild and brief as cowslips in the dale, / Though unrecorded as the gleams of light / That vanish in the quietness of night.' His sudden decision to allow his tenants to 'pay their rents in rhyme' therefore provides Bloomfield with a device to record a number of 'local tales'. May-Day with the Muses is taken up with tales in rhyme delivered by Sir Ambrose's tenants at the Hall's May Day celebrations. I can find no evidence that Tennyson knew Bloomfield's poems, but I am reasonably sure he must have done so. It is difficult not to think that works such as The Princess, which Tennyson called 'A Medley', and the English Idyls find a starting point in Bloomfield's own medley. May-Day with the Muses is in this sense original.

It is also constrained by the nipping air of Evangelicalism, and perhaps by Bloomfield's sensitivity to his wife's religious allegiances. (Joanna Southcott was an ardent Methodist.) Sir Ambrose proposes to outlaw certain tales. He wants 'No stupid ghost, no vulgar thing', nor should tales 'brood o'er midnight darkness, crimes, and blood.' This is surely a sanitised version of cottage tales? To account for why this might be, we should recall that the Society for the Suppression of Vice, which had been set up by the Evangelicals, was busy prosecuting bookshops that stored material of which it disapproved. (In 1822 the Society, of which Clare's patron, Lord Radstock, was Vice-President, managed to have Richard Carlile thrown into prison for selling Queen Mab.) We should also note that the first tale to be told at Oakly Hall is of 'The Drunken Father', and that by the time Bloomfield came to write and publish May-Day with the Muses Evangelicalism had taken up the cause of temperance with an especial vigour. (Although Bloomfield allows the 'mouldy barrel' brought in for the celebrations to be drained.) Other tales, including the forester's, plead the cause of quietism, of contentment with your lot, which is essential to Evangelicalism's vision of the good society.

If none of this seems to overset the achievement of Bloomfield's work, it is, I think, because we are able to see May-Day with the Muses as an idyll in the sense of 'any scene of tranquil happiness.' And 'idyllic', which had come into use in the early eighteenth century, although Johnson does not give it, commonly means 'a serene and euphoric state or environment which is remotely attainable and idealised'. Bloomfield himself describes the scene at

Oakly Hall as one 'that Wilkie might have touch'd with pride'. David Wilkie (1785-1841) who had gained his A.R.A. in 1809, the earliest the honour could be conferred on him, was by the 1820s the most popular genre painter of his day. Works such as 'Blind Fiddler', 'Card Players', 'Reading the Will,' 'The Village Festival' and The 'Rent Day', were much copied, reproduced and imitated. Wilkie's studies of rural circumstance soften harsh realities by a suggestion of the quaint. We might say that May-Day with the Muses does something very similar. But Bloomfield escapes the charge of evasiveness that this implies, just as Keats escapes the charge that in his great semi-Georgic poem 'To Autumn' he idealises what in 1819 was a particularly brutal autumn, as the events at Peterloo made all too plain. May-Day with the Muses offers a vision of rural circumstance which, the poem acknowledges, is ideal, and to be found, if anywhere, only in the past. And its close, the re-enactment of marriage vows between Sir Ambrose and his aged wife, at once celebrates their enduring love and acknowledges its inevitable ending. The last lines of the poem run:

> Nor was the lawn clear till the moon arose,
> And on each turret pour'd a brilliant gleam
> Of modest light, that trembled on the stream;
> The owl awoke, but dared not yet complain,
> And banish'd silence re-assumed her reign. (ll. 1404-07)

Moonlight, turrets, the solitary owl. Picturesque properties, emblems of 'the principle of change' in which the picturesque deals and which, as a result, denies that human agency is in any sense implicated in, or could be responsible for, such change.[13] Yet Bloomfield's surely deliberate echo of a famous line of Pope at the very end of his poem suggests he is fully aware of Time's Alteration. In his Fourth Moral Essay Pope had foreseen the fall of pride, of new wealth, grandeur, and the restoration to the land of health and fruitfulness. And so, contemplating the beggaring of a man whom most commentators take to be the Duke of Chandos and the pulling down of his great house, Cannons, Pope sees 'Deep Harvests bury all his Pride has planned, / And laughing Ceres reassume the Land'. By substituting 'banish'd Silence' for 'laughing Ceres', Bloomfield hints at an ending far from Pope's intent. Laughing Ceres beautifully allows for the idea of renewed festival, of harvest as a time of communality. But the Mayday celebrations Bloomfield attends to are, he knows, done with. Hence, I think, the ground bass of the poem, its strongly elegiac note. 'Such scenes were England's boast in days gone by,' the poem's narrator at one point remarks of Oakly Hall's Mayday celebrations. Now, only art can preserve them. Bloomfield acknowledges as much when he says that had Wilkie painted the scene at Oakly Hall, 'The May-day banquet then had never died.' Now, it can live only through his poem, just as 'local tales' can live only through the ballads and poems made for Sir Ambrose by his tenants. And Sir Ambrose's response to their tales is therefore crucial. He tells them:

> Your verses shall not die as heretofore;
> Your local tales shall not be thrown away...
> I purpose then to send them forth to try
> The public patience, or its apathy.
> The world shall see them; why should I refrain?
> 'Tis all the produce of my own domain.(ll. 1373-74, 1380-83)

This may be compared with Wordsworth's expressed purpose at the opening of 'Michael' to preserve the history 'homely and rude':

> For the delight of a few natural hearts,
> And with yet fonder feeling, for the sake
> Of youthful Poets, who among these Hills
> Will be my second self when I am gone.

With the possible exception of Norman Nicholson in the twentieth century, Wordsworth had no second self. Bloomfield, however, did. His abiding concern for local tales was shared by his 'brother bard and fellow labourer', John Clare. For them all, the vast changes being enacted across the country became matter for poetry. And if Wordsworth spoke for them all when he claimed the poet's responsibility to preserve 'things silently gone out of mind and things violently destroyed,' they speak for him in providing poetic testimony of the real language of men and of the incidents of common life made interesting. Which is one way of saying that we cannot hope properly to understand that historical period which is habitually called Romanticism if we do not pay attention to the works of Robert Bloomfield.

John Lucas
1998, 2007

NOTES

1. Bloomfield continued to sell remarkably well until quite late in the century. See the statistics on his sales compiled by B.C. Bloomfield in 'The Publication of The Farmer's Boy,' The Library, 6th ser., 15, no. 2 (June 1993), 75-94, pp. 91-93.
2. Edward Thomas, 'W.H. Hudson' in A Language Not To Be Betrayed: Selected Prose of Edward Thomas, ed. Edna Longley (Manchester: Carcanet, 1981), p. 143. In her Index

Longley identifies Bloomfield as 'Roger Bloomfield', evidence of how deeply neglect of the poet has reached.

3. Edward Young, 'Conjectures on Original Composition.' The essay, which was first written in 1759, became a key point of reference for those seeking to overthrow the influence of Pope and his school of neo-classical writers. For more on this see my England and Englishness: Ideas of Nationhood in English Poetry 1688-1900 (London: Hogarth Press, 1990), pp. 50-53.
4. From the second edition, 1692, Vol. 2, p. 6.
5. See my essay 'Bloomfield and Clare' in The Independent Spirit: John Clare and the Self-taught Tradition, ed. John Goodridge, (Helpston: The John Clare Society and the Margaret Grainger Memorial Trust, 1994), pp. 55-68, esp. pp. 61-64.
6. British Library, Add. MS 28268, f. 351, quoted by J. N. Lawson, in his Collected Poems by Robert Bloomfield (Gainesville, Florida: Scholars' Facsimiles and Reprints, 1971), p. xii.
7. John Barrell, The Idea of Landscape and the Sense of Place, 1730- 1840: An Approach to the Poetry of John Clare (London: Cambridge University Press, 1972), p. 225.
8. Barrell, p. 126.
9. I think in particular of Clare's remark that compared to Bloomfield, 'Crabbe writes about the peasantry as much like the Magistrate as the Poet. He is determined to show you their worst side ....' (Clare to Allan Cunningham, 9 September 1824, quoted in John Clare: Cottage Tales, ed. Eric Robinson, David Powell and P.M.S. Dawson (Manchester: Carcanet, 1993), p. ix).
10. Bloomfield knew and admired Lyrical Ballads, however: see Remains, II, pp. 111, 119.
11. See the chapter on this in Vincent Newey, Cowper's Poetry: A Critical Study and Reassessment (Liverpool: Liverpool University Press, 1982), pp. 245-70.
12. For the origin of Bloomfield's tale see the story about the Countess of Exeter in the Monthly Magazine, March 1797, reprinted in Cottage Tales, pp. 135-7.
13. For the properties and politics of the picturesque see my essay 'Places and Dwellings: Wordsworth, Clare and the anti-picturesque', in The Iconography of Landscape, eds. Denis Cosgrove and Stephen Daniels (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1988), pp. 33-97.

CHRONOLOGY OF BLOOMFIELD'S LIFE

1766 (3 December) Bloomfield born in Honington, Suffolk. His father George is a poor tailor, his mother Elizabeth a village schoolteacher.
1777 Sent to work on the farm of his uncle, William Austin, in nearby Sapiston.
1781 (29 June) Joins his brothers George (a shoemaker) and Nathaniel (a tailor) in London, staying with George, running errands and learning his trade.
1784 Trade dispute over apprenticeships among the shoemakers; Bloomfield returns to the country, staying with William Austin; later returns to London.
1786 (24 May) 'A Village Girl' printed in Say's Gazetteer; sets up on his own as a ladies' shoemaker.
1790 (12 December) Marries Mary Ann Church.
1796 (May) Begins composing The Farmer's Boy.
1800 (1 March) The Farmer's Boy: A Rural Poem published by Vernor and Hood, with an Introduction by Bloomfield's patron, Capel Lofft.
1802 Rural Tales, Ballads and Songs published; befriended by Edward Jenner.
1803 Given a clerical post by his patrons, but his health forces his resignation after just a few months. Sings a 'Song' for Jenner's birthday.
1804 The vaccination poem Good Tidings published; in December his mother dies.
1806 Wild Flowers; or, Pastoral and Local Poetry published.
1807 Tour of the Wye valley and the Welsh border country.
1808 Nature's Music: Consisting of Extracts from Several Authors, with Practical Observations and Poetical Testimonies, in Honour of the Harp of Aeolus published, edited by Bloomfield, who made Aeolian harps in this period.
1811 The Banks of Wye: a Poem published.
1812 Leaves London and moves to Shefford, Bedfordshire.
1815 The History of Little Davy's New Hat published, a prose work for children.
1822 May Day with the Muses published, his final volume of poetry.
1823 Hazelwood Hall, a Village Drama, in Three Acts published; on 19 August, dies in poverty and distress, though with no evidence of mental illness (pace DNB).
1824 Bloomfield's friend Joseph Weston edits the Remains of Robert Bloomfield (two vols, 1824) for the benefit of Bloomfield's family.

FURTHER READING

Editions

Bloomfield's poems were reprinted many times throughout the nineteenth century. Subsequent editions are far fewer, and those we are aware of are listed here in chronological order (not including several recent print-on-demand reprints).

The Farmer's Boy (London: Staples Books, 1941).

A Selection of Poems by Robert Bloomfield, edited with an Introduction by Roland Gant (London: The Grey Walls Press, 1947).

Selections from the Correspondence of Robert Bloomfield, ed. W. H. Hart (London: Spottiswoode, 1870, privately reprinted by Robert F. Ashby, 1968).

Collected Poems (1800-1822), ed. J. N. Lawson, five volumes in one (Gainesville: Scholars' Facsimiles and Reprints, 1971).

The Farmer's Boy: The Story of a Suffolk Poet, Robert Bloomfield, His Life and Poems 1766-1823, ed. William Wickett and Nicholas Duval (Lavenham: Terence Dalton, 1971), a selected edition and biography.

The Poems of Robert Bloomfield [1827], facsimile (Farnborough: Gregg International, 1971).

Wild Flowers, The Banks of Wye, and May Day with the Muses, introduced by D. H. Reiman (New York and London: Garland, 1977).

The Farmer's Boy (Bury St. Edmunds: Lark Books, 1986).

Biographical and Critical

E. W. Brayley, Views in Suffolk, Norfolk and Northamptonshire, illustrative of the Works of Robert Bloomfield (London: Vernor, Hood and others, 1806).

Spencer T. Hall, 'Bloomfield and Clare', in his Biographical Sketches of Remarkable People, Chiefly from Personal Recollection; with Miscellaneous Papers and Poems (London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co., 1873).

W. E. Wink, Lives of the Illustrious Shoemakers (London: Sampson Low and others, 1883), pp. 100-116.

A. H. R. Fairchild, 'Robert Bloomfield', Studies in Philology, 16 (1919).

Edmund Blunden, Nature in English Literature (1929; reprinted New York: Kennikat Press, 1970), Chapter 5 (on Stephen Duck and Bloomfield).

Rayner Unwin, The Rural Muse (London: George Allen and Unwin, 1954), pp. 87-120.

Graham F. Reed, 'Bloomfield's Aeolus', Notes and Queries, 201 (Oct 1956), 450-1.

The Earl of Cranbrook and John Hadfield, 'Some Uncollected Authors XX: Robert Bloomfield 1766-1823', Book Collector, 8 (1959), 170-9, 299, 431-2.

A. J. Sambrook, 'The Farmer's Boy: Robert Bloomfield, 1766-1823', English, 16 (1967), 167-71.

H. H. Bloomfield, 'The Robert Bloomfield Bicentenary', Bedfordshire Magazine, Vol. 10, no. 80 (Spring 1967).

Jonathan Lawson, Robert Bloomfield (Boston: G. K. Hall, 1980). Twayne's English Authors Series, no. 310.

Robert F. Ashby, 'The First Editions of The Farmer's Boy', Book Collector, 41, part 2 (1992), 180-7.

B. C. Bloomfield, 'The Publication of The Farmer's Boy', The Library, 6th ser., 15, no. 2 (June 1993), 75-94.

John Lucas, 'Bloomfield and Clare', in The Independent Spirit: John Clare and the Self-Taught Tradition, ed. John Goodridge (Helpston: The John Clare Society and the Margaret Grainger Memorial Trust, 1994), pp. 55-68; see also Ronald Blythe's remarks on Bloomfield, pp. 181-84, revised in his Talking About John Clare (Nottingham: Trent Books, 1999), pp. 126-30.

Annette Wheeler Cafarelli, 'The Romantic "Peasant" Poets and their Patrons', The Wordsworth Circle, 26 (1995), 77-87.

Tim Fulford and Debbie Lee, 'The Jenneration of Disease: Vaccination, Romanticism and Revolution', Studies in Romanticism, 39. no. 1 (2000), 139-63.

William J. Christmas, The Lab'ring Muses: Work, Writing, and the Social Order in English Plebeian Poetry 1730-1830 (Newark, DE: University of Delaware Press, 2001), pp. 267-82.

John Goodridge, 'John Clare and Eighteenth-Century Poetry: Pomfret, Cunningham, Bloomfield', Eighteenth Century: Theory and Interpretation, 42, no. 3 (2001), 264-78.

Bridget Keegan, 'Cobbling Verse: Early Modern English Shoemaker Poets', Eighteenth Century: Theory and Interpretatio, 42, no. 3 (2001), 195-217.

The Robert Bloomfield Society Newsletter, ed. by John Goodridge (nos, 1-4, 2001-03), and by Hugh Underhill (nos. 5- , 2003-).

Bridget Keegan, 'Lambs to the Slaughter: Leisure and Laboring-Class Poetry', Romanticism on the Net, 27 (2002) [electronic publication].

John Goodridge, 'Now Wenches, Listen, and Let Lovers Lie: Women's Storytelling in Bloomfield and Clare', John Clare Society Journal, 22 (2003), 77-92.

Bruce Graver, 'Illustrating The Farmer's Boy', Romanticism, 9, no. 2 (2003), 157-75.

Simon J. White, 'Rural Medicine: Robert Bloomfield's "Good Tidings"', Romanticism, 9, no. 2 (2003), 141-56.

Robert Druce, '"While Fields Shall Bloom, Thy name Shall Live": Robert Bloomfield's Short-Lived Fame', in 'A Natural Delineation of Human Passions': The Historic Moment of Lyrical Ballads (Amsterdam: Rodopi, 2004), pp. 169-88.

Donald Zimmerman, 'The Medium of Antipastoral: Protest between the Lines in Robert Bloomfield's The Farmer's Boy', ANQ, 17, no. 2 (2004), 35-39.

Simon White, John Goodridge and Bridget Keegan (eds), Robert Bloomfield: Lyric, Class, and the Romantic Canon (Lewisburg, PA: Bucknell University Press, 2006).

Tim Fulford and Lynda Pratt (eds), John Goodridge (associate ed.), The Letters of Robert Bloomfield (electronic edition, 'Romantic Circles' web page, forthcoming).

John Goodridge, '"That deathless wish of climbing higher": Robert Bloomfield on the Sugar Loaf', in Wales and the Romantic Imagination, ed. by Damian Walford Davies and Lynda Pratt (Cardiff: University off Wales Press, forthcoming).

Simon White, 'Rethinking the History of the Wye: Robert Bloomfield's "Banks of Wye", Literature and History (forthcoming).

Simon White, Robert Bloomfield, Romanticism and the Poetry of Community (Aldershot and Burlington, VT: Ashgate Publishing, forthcoming).

A NOTE ON THE TEXT

There are complex textual problems with Bloomfield's poetry, particularly The Farmer's Boy. Having carefully examined Bloomfield's manuscripts and early editions, we recognised that a full presentation of variant texts was beyond the scope of the present selected edition. We believe that a complete scholarly edition of Bloomfield is urgently needed. (As the present revised edition of the selected poems goes to press, a team led by our colleague Tim Fulford is working on a full scholarly edition of Bloomfield's letters, a step that is greatly to be welcomed.) Given the poem's textual complexity, a variorum edition of The Farmer's Boy must also be a priority in Bloomfield scholarship. The poet regarded Capel Lofft's ever-expanding critical apparatus and some of his editing decisions as intrusive, and in the stereotype edition of his first four volumes, The Poems of Robert Bloomfield (two volumes, 1809), he took the opportunity to make some corrections to the text, and in some cases restore manuscript readings. We have chosen to follow this, rather than the more familiar first editions, as our copy text for Rural Tales, Good Tidings, and Wild Flowers.

This was also our copy-text for The Farmer's Boy in the first edition of the present selection. For the second edition, however, we are adopting a more radical approach to this most textually contentious of Bloomfield's texts. We are publishing for the first time the text of the poem as Bloomfield wrote it out afresh, from memory, in October 1801. As the poet explains in his authorial note, reproduced on p. 22 below, this was an attempt to put on record what he claimed was his precise original text of the poem, complete with his original errors, which are carefully noted on the blank versos of the manuscript, along with a record of all the changes Lofft had made to the poem, and discussion of these changes and of the composition of the poem. This manuscript is now held, along with the copy-text manuscript, by the Houghton Library, Harvard University (fMS 776.1), and we are grateful for their kind permission to base our edition on it.

Its significance, and our reason for publishing it, is twofold. Firstly, the original, copy-text manuscript of the poem (fMS 776) is unstable, in that it is over-written by Capel Lofft in a way that makes it impossible always to be certain whether individual letters and punctuation marks are in the hand of Bloomfield or Lofft. Secondly, the reconstruction offers a far more radical restoration of Bloomfield's original text than the 1809 stereotype edition, especially in terms of spelling and punctuation. A single example shows the significance of this. In every edition of Bloomfield hitherto printed, the farmer in 'Summer' calls out: "Boy, bring thy harrows, try how deep the rain

/ Has forc'd its way" (33-4). But Bloomfield's farmer was a Suffolk man, and he used Suffolk verb forms: thus the manuscript version of this is: "Boy bring thy Harrows, try how deep the rain / Have forced its way" (our emphasis). As with John Clare, this is not just a question of editors tidying up a little: here a dialect form has been obliterated. The manuscript restores it. The result is a less genteel poem, closer to Bloomfield than to his polite readers.

The Banks of Wye follows the text of the corrected second edition of 1813, while May-Day with the Muses follows the text of its first edition (1822), the only version published in the author's lifetime. Other texts are from Bloomfield's Remains (1824). We now include a full text of Good Tidings, and since the poem underwent significant revision, we have indicated in our endnotes the substantive variants between the first edition (1804) and the copy text (1809).

Since this is a general edition, we silently correct obvious typographical errors and inconsistencies in printed texts, especially where line-end punctuation is unclear, and we generally standardise the use of emphasis, quotation marks, verse indentations, etc., in line with modern conventions. Since we are taking a quite different and new approach to The Farmer's Boy, here we adhere as far as one can in a printed text to the manuscript presentation. In a very small number of instances where Bloomfield has evidently omitted a word or phrase in error, we restore it between editorial square brackets.

THE FARMER'S BOY (1800)

Letter to George Bloomfield, from the Preface to Poems (1809), Volume I

London, Sunday, Sept. 16, 1798

Dear George,

I gave you a hint long ago that I was making rhymes. I now send the Poem, as a present to my Mother. It coming through your hands, you will be at liberty to detain it as long as you please; and I have no doubt but some parts of it will please you. I would wish you to observe well the following remarks, and I wish you to be candid if it should ever draw any remarks from you.

When I began it, I thought to myself that I could complete it in a twelvemonth, allowing myself three months for each quarter but I soon found that I could not; and indeed I made it longer than I at first intended. Nine tenths of it were put together as I sat at work, where there are usually six of us. No one in the house has any knowledge of what I have employed my thoughts about when I did not talk.

I chose to do it in rhime for this reason; because I found always that when I put two or three lines together in blank verse, or something that sounded like it, it was ten to one if it stood right when it came to be written down. Winter and half of Autumn were done long before I could find leisure to write them. In the 'Harvest Home' you will find the essence of letters which you wrote formerly to London.

When I had nearly done it, it came strongly into my mind that very silly things are sometimes printed; but by what means I knew not. To try and get at this knowledge, I resolved to make some efforts of that sort; and what encouraged me to go through with it was, that, if I got laughed at, no one that I cared for could know it, unless I myself told them.

Authorial Note (1801)

City Road, London,
Oct^{r} 8th 1801.

The Original Manuscript of my "Farmer's Boy" is not likely ever to be in my possession again; it being left, by Mr Lofft's desire, in the hands of T Hill Esq. of Henrietta Street Covent Garden; where it now remains; except about two hundred and Sixty lines of the commencement of the Poem which are lost.

Wishing to possess a Manuscript like the Original, I mean that the right hand page of this Book shall contain a genuine Copy of the Poem as I wrote it at first; and that the left hand page shall shew the amendments and alterations introduced by Mr Lofft. This I can do now while my memory retains the deviations; but, some years hence, I may not be able, and may then wish that I had done it when it was in my power.
Robert Bloomfield.

N.B. As I am not master of Punctuation I shall not attend to it in the following Sheets, but meerly record the Original text.

And further be it remember'd that

On the first publication of the Poem the whole of the Preface was as new to me as the Poem was to the World. I had Nothing to do with it, nor had ever seen it.

The Farmer's Boy. A Poem.

Spring

O come blest Spirit! whatsoe'er thou art
Thou rushing warmth that hover round my heart
Sweet inmate hail,! thou source of sterling joy
That Poverty itself cannot destroy
Be thou my Muse, and faithful still to me
Retrace the paths of wild obscurity
No deeds of arms my lowly tale rehearse
No Alpine wonders thunder through my verse
The roaring Cataract, the snow-top'd hill,
Inspiring awe till breath itself stands still
Nature's sublimer scenes ne'er charm'd mine eyes
Nor Science led me through the boundless skies
From meaner objects far my raptures flow
O point those raptures, bid my bosom glow
And lead my Soul to extacies of praise
For all the blessings of my infant days
Bear me through regions where gay Fancy dwells
But mould to truth's fair form what mem'ry tells.
    Live trifling incidents and grace my song
That to the humblest menial belong
To him whose drudgery unheeded goes
His joys unrecon'd as his cares or woes
Though joys and cares in every path are sown
And youthful minds have feelings of their own
Quick springing sorrows trancient as the dew
Delights from trifles, trifles ever new.
    Twas thus with Giles, meek, fatherless, and poor
Labour his portion, but he felt no more
No stripes, no tyrany, his steps persue'd

His life was constant chearful servitude
Strange to the world he wore a bashful look
The Fields his study, Nature was his book,
And as revolving seasons changd the scene
From heat to cold, tempestuous to serene
Though every change still varied his employ
Yet each new duty brought its share of joy.
    Where Noble Grafton spreads his rich domains
Round Euston's water'd Vale and sloping plains
Where Woods and Groves in solemn grandure rise
Where the kite brooding unmolested flies
The Woodcock and the painted Pheasant race
And skulking Foxes destin'd for the chace
There Giles untaught and unrepining stray'd
Through every Copse and Grove and winding glade
There his first thoughts to Nature's charms inclin'd
That stamps devotion on th' enquiring mind.
A little Farm his generous Master tilld
Who with peculiar grace his station fill'd
By deeds of hospitality endear'd
Serve'd from affection, for his worth rever'd,
A happy offspring blest his plenteous board
His fields were fruitful and his Barns well stor'd
And fourscore Ewes he fed, a sturdy team,
And lowing Kine that grazed beside the stream
Unceasing industry he kept in view
And never lack'd a job for Giles to do.
    Fled now the sullen murmurs of the north
The splendid raiment of the Spring peeps forth
Her universal green, and the clear sky
Delight still more and more the gazing eye
Wide o'er each field in rising moisture strong
Shoots up the simple flow'r, or creeps along
The mellow'd soil imbibing as it goes
Fresh sweets from frequent show'rs and evening dews
That summons from its shed the slumbring plough
While health impregnates every breeze that blow.
No wheels support the diving pointed Share
No groaning Ox is doomd to labour there
No helpmate teach the docile steed his road

Alike unknown the ploughboy and the goad,
But unassisted through each toilsome day
With smiling brow the ploughman cleaves his way
Draws his fresh parellels and widening still
Treads slow the heavy dale or climbs the hill
Strong on the wing his busy followers play
Where writhing earthworms meet th'unwellcome day
Till all is chang'd and hill and level down
Assume a livery of sober brown
Again desturb'd when Giles with wearying strides
From ridge to ridge the pond'rous Harrow guides
His heels deep sinking every step he goes
Till dirt usurp the empire of his shoes,
Wellcome green headland! firm beneath his feet
Wellcome the friendly Bank's refreshing seat
There warm with toil his panting Horses browse
Their shelt'ring canopy of pendant boughs
Till rest delicious chace each trancient pain
And newborn vigor swells in every vein.
Hour after hour, and day to day succeeds
Till every clod and deep-drawn furrow spreads
To crumbling mould, a level surfice clear
And strew'd with corn to crown the rising year
And o'er the whole Giles traverse once again
In earth's moist bosom buries up the grain
The work is done, no more to man is given
The grateful farmer trusts the rest to Heav'n
Yet oft with anxious heart he looks around
And marks the first green blade that pierce the ground
In fancy sees his trembling Oats uprun
His tufted Barly yellow with the Sun,
Sees clouds propetious shed their timely store
And all his Harvest gather'd round his door
But still unsafe the big swoln grain below
A favorite morsel with the Rook and Crow
From field to field the flock increasing goes
To level crops most formidable foes
Their danger well the warry plundrers know
And place a watch on some conspicuous bough
Yet oft the skulking gunner by surprize

Will scatter death amongst them as they rise.
These, hung in triumph round the spacious field
At best will but a short-liv'd terror yield
Nor guards of property, not penal Law
But harmless riflemen of rags and straw
Familiarised to these they boldly rove
Nor heed a Centinal that never move.
Let then your birds lie prostrate on the earth
In dying posture, and with wings stretch'd forth
Shift them at eve and morn from place to place
And death shall terify the pilfering race
In the mid-air, while circling round and round
They call their lifeless comrades from the ground
With quickning wing and notes of loud alarm
Warn the whole flock to shun th' impending harm
    This task had Giles, in fields remote from home
Oft has he wish'd the rosy morn to come
Yet never fam'd was he nor foremost found
To break the seal of sleep, his sleep was sound,
But when at day-break summon'd from his bed
Light as the Lark that carrold o'er his head
His sandy way deep-worn by hasty show'rs
O'erarch'd with Oaks that formd fantastic bow'rs
Waving aloft their tow'ring branches proud
In borrowd tinges from the eastern cloud
Gave inspiration pure as ever flow'd,
And genuine transport in his bosom glowd
His own shrill mattin join'd the various notes
Of nature's music from a thousand throats.
The Blackbird strove with emulation sweet
And echo answer'd from her close retreat
The sporting Whitethroat on some twigs-end borne
Pourd hymns to freedom and the rising morn
Stopt in her song perchance the starting Thrush
Shook a bright show'er from the Blackthorn-bush
Where dewdrops thick as early blossoms hung
And trembled as the Minstrel sweetly sung.
Across his path in either Grove to hide
The timid Rabit scouted by his side
Or bold Cock-pheasant stalk'd along the road

Whose gold and purple tints alternate glow'd.
    But groves no further fenc'd the devious way
A wide-extended Heath before him lay
Where, on the grass the stagnant shower had run
And shone a mirror to the rising Sun
Thus doubly seen to clear a distant wood,
And give new life to each expanding bud,
Effacing quick the dewy footmarks found
Where prowling Reynard trod his nightly round
To shun whose thefts 'twas Giles's evening care
His feather'd victims to suspend in air
High on a bough that noded oer his head
And thus each morn to strew the field with dead.
    His simple errand done, he homward hies
Another instantly its place supplies
The clatt'ring Dairy-Maid immerst in steam
Singing and scrubing midst her milk and cream
Bawls out "Go fetch the Cows"—he hears no more
For pigs and Ducks and Turkies throng the door
And sitting Hens for constant War prepar'd
A concert strange to that which late he heard.
Straight to the Meadow then he whistling goes
With wellknown hallo calls his lazy Cows
Down the rich pasture heedlessly they graze
Or hear the summons with an idle gaze
For well they know the Cowyard yields no more
Its tempting fragrance, nor its wintry store.
Reluctance marks their steps sedate and slow
The right of conquest all the law they know,
Subbordination stage by stage succeed,
And one amongst them allways takes the lead
Is ever foremost wheresoe'er they stray
Allow'd preceedence, undesputed sway
With jealous pride her station is maintain'd
For many a broil that post of honour gain'd.
At home the yard affords a grateful scene
For Spring makes e'en a miry cowyard clean.
Thense from its chalky bed behold convey'd
The rich manure that drenching Winter made
And pile'd near home grows green with many a weed

A promis'd nutriment for Autumn's seed.
Forth comes the Maid, and like the morning smiles
The Mistress too, and followd close by Giles;
A friendly Tripod forms their humble seat
With pails bright scour'd, and delicately sweet
Where shadowing Elms obstruct the morning ray
Begins their work, begins the simple lay.
The fullcharg'd Udder yields its willing streams
And Mary sings some lover's am'rous dreams
And crouching Giles beneath a neighbouring tree
Tuggs o'er his pail and chaunts with equal glee
Whose Hat with tatterd brim, of napp so bare
From the Cow's side purloins a coat of hair
A motle'd ensign of his harmless trade
An unambitious, peacible cockade.
As unambitious too that chearful aid
The Mistress yields beside her rosy Maid
With joy she views her plenteous reeking store
And bears a brimmer to the Dairy door
Her Cows dissmisst, the lusious Mead to roam
Till eve again recall them loaded home.
And now the Dairy claims her choicest care
And all her household find employment there,
Slow rolls the Churn, its load of cloging cream
At once forgoes its quality and name
From knotty particles first floating wide
Congealing Butter dash from side to side
New milk around through flowing coolers stray
And snow-white Curd abounds, and wholsome whey
Due North the unglazed windows, cold and clear
For warming Sunbeams are unwellcome here
Brisk goes the work beneath each busy hand
And Giles must trudge who'ever gives command
A Gibeonite that serves them all by turns
He drains the pump, from him the faggot burns
From him the noisy Hogs demand their food
While at his heels run many a chirping brood
Or down his path in expectation stand
With equal claims upon his strewing hand
Thus wastes the morn, till each with pleasure sees

The bustle o'er, and prest the new-made Cheese.
    Unrival'd stands thy country Cheese O Giles
Whose very name alone engenders smiles
Whose fame abroad by every tongue is spoke
The well-known butt of many a flinty joke
That pass like current coin the Nation through
And oh! experience proves the satyre true.
Provision's grave! thou ever-craving mart,
Dependant, huge Metropolis, where Art
Her poring thousands stows in breathless rooms
Midst pois'nous smokes, and steems, and ratling Looms,
Where grandure revels in unbounded stores
Restraint a slighted stranger at their doors
Thou, like a whirlpool drain the Country round
Till London Market, London price, resound
Through every Town, round every passing load
And Dairy produce throng the Eastern road
Delicious Veal, and Butter every hour
From Essex lowlands, and the banks of Stour
And further far where num'rous Herds repose
From Orwell's brink, from Weveny and Ouse.
Hence Suffolk dairy-wives run mad for cream
And leave their milk with nothing but its name
Its name derision and reproach persue
And strangers tell of "Three-times-skim'd Sky-blue,"
To cheese converted, what can be its boast?
What, but the common virtues of a post?
If drought o'ertake it faster than the knife
Most fair it bids for stubborn length of life
And, like the Oken shelf whereon tis laid
Mocks the weak efforts of the bending blade
Or in the Hog-trough rests in perfect spite
Too big to swallow, and too hard to bite:
Inglorious victory! Ye Cheshire meads
Or Severn's flow'ry dales, where plenty treads
Was your rich milk to suffer wrongs like these
Farewell your pride, farewell renowned Cheese
The Skimmer dread, whose ravages alone
Thus turn the mead's sweet Nectre into stone.
    Neglected now the early Daisy lies

Nor thou pale primrose bloom the only prize
Advancing Spring profusely spreads abroad
Flow'rs of all hues with sweetest fragrance stor'd
Where'er she treads Love gladdens every plain
Delight on tiptoe bears her lucid train
Sweet Hope with conscious brow before her flies
Anticipating wealth from Summer skies
All Nature feels her renovating sway
The sheep-fed pasture, and the meadow gay
And trees and Shrubs no longer buding seen
Desplay the newgrown branch of lighter green
On airy downs the Shepherd idling lies
And sees tomorow in the marbled skies
Here then my Soul thy darling theme persue
For every day was Giles a Shepherd too.
    Small was his charge, no wilds had they to roam
But bright enclosures circling round their home
Nor yellow blossom'd Furse, nor stubborn thorn,
The heath's rough produce, had their fleeces torn
Yet ever roving, ever seeking thee,
Enchanting spirit! dear variety!
O happy tennants, prisoners of a day
Releas'd to ease, to pleasure, and to play,
Indulg'd through every field by turns to range
And tast them all in one continual change
For though luxuriant their grassy food
Sheep long confin'd but loath the present good,
Instinctively they haunt the homeward gate
And starve and pine with plenty at their feet.
Loos'd from the winding lane a joyful throng
See! o'er yon pasture how they pour along
Giles round their boundarys takes his usual stroll
Sees every pass secure and fences whole
High fences proud to charm the gazing eye
Where many a nestling first assays to fly
Where blows the Woodbine faintly streak'd with red
And rests on every bough its tender head
Round the young Ash its twining branches meet
Or crown the Hawthorn with its odours sweet.
    Say ye that know, ye who have felt and seen

Spring's morning smiles and soul-enlivening green
Say, did you give the thrilling transport way?
Did your eye brighten when young Lambs at play
Leap'd-oer your path with animated pride,
Or gaz'd in merry clusters by your side?
Ye who can smile, to wisdom no disgrace
At the arch meaning of a Kitten's face
If spotless innocence and infant mirth
Exites to praise, or gives reflection birth
In shades like these persue your favorite joy
Midst Nature's revels, sports that never cloy.
A few begin a short but vigorous race
And indolence abashd soon flies the place
Thus chaleng'd forth, see! thither one by one
From every side assembling playmates run;
A thousand wily antics mark their stay
A starting croud impatient of delay
Like the fond Dove from fearful prison freed
Each seems to say, "Come let us try our speed,"
Away they scour, impetuous, ardent, strong,
The green turf trembling as they bound along
Adown the slope, then up the hillock climb
Where every molehill is a bed of Thyme
There panting stop; yet scarcely can refrain,
A Bird, a leafe, will set them of again.
Or, if a gale with strength unusual blow
Scat'ring the Wild-brier Roses into snow
Their little limbs increasing efforts try
Like the torn flower the fair assemblage fly.
Ah! fall'n Rose, sad emblem of their doom
Frail as thyself they perish while they bloom!
Though unoffending innocence may plead
Though frantic ewes may mourn the savage deed
Their Shepherd comes a messenger of blood
And drive them bleating from their sports and food
Care loads his brow and pity wrings his heart
For lo! the murdering Butcher with his Cart
Demands the firstlings of his flock to die
And makes a sport of Life and Liberty!
His gay companions Giles beholds no more;

Clos'd are their eyes, their fleeces drench'd in gore,
Nor can compassion with her softest notes
Withhold the knife that plunges through their throats.
Down, indignation! hence, ideas foul!
Away the shocking immage from my soul!
Let kindlier visitants attend my way
Beneath approaching Summer's fervid ray
Nor thankless glooms obtrude, nor cares annoy
Whilst the sweet theme is universal joy.

Composed between May and December
1796.—

Summer

The Farmer's life desplays in every part
A moral lesson to the sensual heart
Though in the lap of plenty thoughtful still
He looks beyond the present good or ill
Nor estimate alone one blessings worth
From changfull Seasons or capricious earth
But views the future with the present hours
And looks for failours, as he looks for show'rs
For casual as for certain want prepares
And round his yard the reeking Hay-stack rears
Or Clover, blossom'd lovely to the sight
His team's rich store through many a wintry night.
What though abundance round his dwelling spreads
Though ever moist his self-improving meads
Supply his Dairy with a copious flood
And seem to promise unexhausted food
That promise fails when buried deep in snow
And vegetative juices cease to flow.
For this his plough turns up the destin'd lands
Whence stormy Winter draws its full demands,
For this the seed minutely small he sows
Whense sound and sweet the hardy Turnip grows.

But how unlike to April's milder days
High climbs the Sun and darts his pow'rful rays
Whitens the freshdrawn mould and parches through
The cumbrous clods that tumble round the plough.
O'er Heav'n's bright azure hense with joyful eyes
The Farmer see dark clouds assembling rise
Borne o'er his fields a heavy torrent falls
And strikes the earth in hasty driving squalls
"Right wellcome down ye precious drops" he cries
But soon, too soon the partial blessing flies
"Boy bring thy Harrows, try how deep the rain
Have forced its way," he comes, but comes in vain
Dry dust beneath the bubling surface lurks
And mocks his pains the more [the more] he works
Still midst huge clods he plunges on forlorn
That laugh his Harrows and the show'r to scorn.
E'en thus the living clod, the stubborn fool
Resists the stormy lectures of the school
Till tried with gentler means the dunce to please
His head imbibes right reason by degrees
As when from eve till morning's wakeful hour
Light constant rain evince its secret power
And e'er the day resumes its wonted smiles
Presents a chearful easy task for Giles,
Down with a touch the mellowd soil is laid
And yon tall crop next claims his timely aid
Thither well-pleasd he hies, assured to find
Wild trackless haunts and objects to his mind.
    Shot up from broad rank blades that droop below
The noding Wheat-ear forms a graceful bow,
With milky kernells starting full weigh'd down
E'er yet the Sun hath tinged its head with brown
While thousands in a flock for ever gay
Loud chirping Sparrows wellcome on the day
And from the mazes of the leafy thorn
Drop one by one upon the bending corn
Giles, with a pole assails their close retreats
And round the grass-grown dewy border beats
On either side compleatly overspread
Here, branches bend, there, corn o'ertops his head

Green covert hail! for through the varying year
No hour so sweet, no scene to him so dear.
Here Wisdom's placid eye delighted sees
The frequent intervals of lonely ease
And with one ray his infant soul inspires
Just kindling there her never-dying fires
Whence solitude derives peculiar charms
And heav'n-directed thought his bosom warms.
Just where the parting bough's light shadows play
Scarce in the shade, nor in the scorching day
Stretch'd on the turf he lies, a peopled bed
Where swarming insects creep around his head
The small dust-colour'd Beetle climbs with pain
Oer the smooth plantain-leaf—a spacious plain!
Thence higher still by countless steps convey'd
He gains the summit of a shiv'ring blade
And flirts his filmy wings, and looks around
Exulting in his distance from the ground.
The tender speckel'd Moth here dancing seen
The vaulting Grasshopper of glossy green,
And all prolific Summer's sporting train
Their little lives by various pow'rs sustain
But what can unassisted vision do?
What but recoil where most it would persue;
His patient gaze but finish with a sigh
When music waking speaks the Sky-Lark nigh.
Just starting from the Corn she cheerly sings
And trusts with conscious pride her downy wings
Still louder breaths, and in the face of day
Mounts up, and calls on Giles to mark her way.
Close to his eyes his Hat he instant bends
And forms a friendly Teliscope, that lends
Just aid enough to dull the glaring light
And place the wand'ring bird before his sight
Yet oft beneath a Cloud she sweeps along
Lost for awhile, yet pours her varied song
He views the Spot, and as the cloud moves by
Again she stretches up the clear blue sky
Her form, her motion, undestinguis'd quite
Save when she wheels direct from shade to light:

The flut'ring songstress a mere speck became
Like fancy's floating bubbles in a dream
He sees her yet, but yielding to repose
Unwittingly his jaded eyelids close.
Delicious Sleep! from sleep who could forbear
With no more guilt than Giles, and no more care?
Peace o'er his slumbers waves her guardian wing
Nor conscience once desturb him with a sting.
He wakes refresh'd from every trivial pain
And takes his Pole and brushes round again.
    Its dark-green hue, its sicklier tints all fail
And ripening Harvest rustles in the gale
A glorious sight, if glory dwells below
Where Heav'ns munificence makes all the show
Oer every Field and golden prospect found
To glad the ploughman's sunday morning's round
When on some eminence he takes his stand
To judge the smiling produce of the land.
Here vanity slinks back her head to hide,
What is there here to flatter human pride?
The tow'ring fabric, or the dome's loud roar
And steadfast Collumns may astonish more
Where the charm'd gazer long delighted stays
Yet trace but to the Architect the praise,
Whilst here the veriest clown that treads the sod
Without one scruple gives the praise to God
A twofold joy possess his raptur'd mind
From gratitude and admiration join'd.
    Here, midst the boldest triumphs of his worth
Nature herself invites the Reapers forth
Dares the keen Scikle from its twelvmonth's rest
And gives that ardor which in every breast
From infancy to age alike appears
When the first sheaf its plumy top uprears.
No rake takes here what heav'n to all bestows
Children of Want, for you the bounty flows,
And every Cottage from the plenteous store
Receives a burden nightly at its door.
    Hark! where the sweeping Scythe now rips along
Each sturdy mower emulous and strong

Whose writhing loins meredian heat defies
Bends o'er his work, and every sinue Tries;
Prostrates the waving treasure at his feet
But spares the rising Clover, short and sweet.
Come Health! Come Jolity! lightfooted come,
Here hold your revels and make this your home,
Each heart awaits and hails you as its own
Each moisten'd brow that scorns to wear a frown
Th'unpeople'd dwelling mourns its tenants stray'd
E'en the domestic laughing Dairy-Maid
Hies to the field the general toil to share
Meanwhile the Farmer quits his elbow chair
His cool brick floor, his Pitcher, and his ease,
And braves the sultry beams, and gladly sees
His gates thrown open and his team abroad
The ready group attendant on his word
To turn the swarth, the quiv'ring load to rear,
Or ply the busy Rake the land to clear.
Summer's light garb itself now cumbrous grown
Each his thin doublet in the shade throws down
Where oft the Mastiff skulks with half-shut eye
And rouses at the stranger passing by.
Whilst unrestrain'd the social converse flows
And every breast love's pow'rful impulse knows
And rival Wits with more than rustic grace
Confess the presence of a pretty face
For lo! encircled there the lovely Maid
In youth's own bloom and native smiles arrayd
Her Hat awry, divested of her Gown
Her creaking Stays of Leather stout and brown
Invidious barrier! why art thou so high?
When the slight cov'ring of her neck slips by
There half revealing to the eager sight
Her full ripe bosom exquisitely white.
In many a local tale of harmless mirth
And many a jest of momentary birth
She bears a part, and as she stops to speak
Strokes back the ringlets from her glowing cheek.
    Now noon gone by, and four declining hours
The weary limbs relax their boasted pow'rs

Thirst rages strong, the fainting spirits fail,
And asks the sov'reign cordial, homebrew'd Ale.
Beneath some sheltering heap of yellow corn
Rests the hoop'd Keg, and friendly cooling horn
That mocks alike the Goblets brittle frame
Its costlier potions, and its nobler name.
To Mary first the briming draught is give'n
By toils made wellcome as the dews of Heav'n.
And never lip that press'd its homely edge
Had kinder blessings or a hartier pledge.
    Of wholsome viands here a banquet smiles
A common cheer for all,—e'en humble Giles
Who joys his trivial services to yield
Amidst the fragrance of the open field
Oft doom'd in suffocating heat to bear
The cobweb'd Barn's impure and dusty air
To ride in murky state the panting steed
Destined aloft th'unloaded grain to tread
Where in his path as heaps on heaps are thrown
He rears and plunges the loose mountain down
Laborious task! with what delight when done
Both Horse and rider greet th'unclouded Sun!
    Yet by the unclouded Sun are hourly bred
The bold assailants that surround thine head
Poor patient Ball; and with insulting wing
Roar in thine ears and dart the piercing sting.
In thy behalf thy crest of boughs avail
More than thy short-clipt remnant of a tail
A moving mockery, a useless name,
A living proof of cruelty and shame.
Shame to the man whatever fame he bore
Who took from thee what man can ne'er restore
Thy weapon of defence, thy chiefest good
When swarming flies contending suck thy blood.
Nor thine alone the sufferings, thine the care,
The fretfull Ewe bemoans an equal share
Tormented into sores her head she hides
Or angry brush them from her new-shorn sides.
Pen'd in the Yard, e'en now at closing day,
Unruly Cows with markd impatience stay

And vainly striving to escape their foes
The pail kick down; a piteous current flows.
I'st not enough that plagues like these molest?
Must still another foe annoy their rest?
He comes, the pest and terror of the yard
His full fledged progony's imperious guard
The Gander ... spiteful, insolent, and bold,
At the Colt's footlock takes his daring hold
There, serpent-like escapes a dreadful blow
And straight attacks a poor defenceless Cow
Each booby Goose th'unworthy strife enjoys
And hails his prowess with redoubled noise
Then back he stalks of self importance full
Seizes the shaggy foretop of the Bull
Till whirl'd aloft he falls, a timely check
Enough to dislocate his worthless neck
For lo! of old he boasts an honour'd wound,
Behold that broken wing that trails the ground!
Thus fools and bravo's kindred pranks persue
As savage quite and oft as fatal too.
Happy the man who foils an envious elfe
And use the darts of spleen to serve himself:
As when by turns the strolling Swine engage
The utmost efforts of the Bully's rage
Whose nibling warfare on the grunter's side
Is wellcome pleasure to his bristly hide;
Gently he stoops, or lays himself along,
Enjoys the insults of the gabling throng,
That march exulting round his fallen head
As human victors trample on their dead.
Still twilight wellcome! rest, how sweet art thou!
Now eve o'erhangs the western Cloud's thick brow;
The far-stretch'd curtain of retiring light
With fiery treasures frought, that on the sight
Flash from its bulging sides, where darkness low'rs
In fancy's eye a chain of mouldring tow'rs
Or craggy coasts just rising into view
Midst Jav'lins dire and darts of streaming blue.
Anon tired labourers bless their shelt'ring home
When midnight, and the frightfull tempest come

The Farmer wakes and sees with silent dread
The angry shafts of Heav'n gleam round his bed
The bursting cloud reiterated roars
Shakes his straw roof, and jars his bolted doors.
The slow-wing'd storm along the troubled skies
Spreads its dark course, the wind begins to rise;
And full-leaf'd Elms, his dwelling's shade by day
With mimic thunder gives its fury way
Sounds in his chimney top a doleful peal
Midst pouring rain, or gusts of ratling hail;
With tenfold danger low the tempest bends
And quick and strong the sulphurous flame descends
The frighten'd Mastiff from his kennel flies
And cringes at the door with piteous cries.
Where now's the trifler? where the child of pride?
These are the moments when the heart is tried
Nor lives the man with conscience e'er so clear
But feels a solemn rev[er]ential fear,
Feels too a joy relieve his aching breast
When the spent storm hath howld itself to rest.
Still wellcome beats the long continued show'r
And sleep protracted comes with double pow'r
Calm dreams of bliss brings on the morning sun
For every Barn is fill'd, and Harvest done.
    Now, ere sweet Summer bids its long adieu
And winds blow keen where late the blossom grew
The bustling day and jovial night must come
The long accustom'd feast of Harvest-home.
No bloodstain'd victory in story bright
Can give the philosophic mind delight
No triumph please, while rage and death destroy
Reflection sickens at the monstrous joy.
And where the joy, if rightly understood
Like chearful praise for universal good?
The soul nor check nor doubtful anguish knows
But free and pure the grateful current flows.
    Behold the sound Oak table's massy frame
Bestride the Kitchen floor, the careful Dame
And generous Host invite their friends around
For all that clear'd the crop, or tilld the ground

Are guests by right of custom, old and young
And many a neighboring Yeoman joins the throng
With artizans that lent their dext'rous aid
When o'er each field the flaming sunbeams play'd
Yet Plenty reigns, and from her boundless hoard
Though not one jelly trembles on the board
Supplies the feast with all that sence can crave
With all that made our great forefathers brave,
Ere the cloyd palate countless flavours tried
And Cooks had nature's judgment set aside.
With thanks to Heav'n, and tales of rustic lore
The mansion echos, when the banquet's o'er
A wider circle spreads and smiles abound
As quick the frothing Horn performs its round
Care's mortal foe, that sprightly joys impart
To chear the frame and elevate the heart
Here fresh and brown the Hazel's produce lies
In tempting heaps, and peals of laughter rise
And crackling music with the frequent song
Unheeded bears the midnight hour along.
    Here, once a year destinction low'rs its crest
The Master, servant, and the merry guest
Are equal all, and round the happy ring
The reaper's eye exulting glances fling
And warm'd with gratitude he quits his place
With sun-burnt hands and ale-enliven'd face
Refills the jugg his honour'd Host to tend
To serve at once the master and the friend
Proud thus to meet his smiles, to share his tale
His Nuts, his conversation, and his Ale.
    Such were the days; of days long past I sing
When pride gave place to mirth without a sting
Ere tyrant customs strength sufficient bore
To violate the feelings of the poor
To leave them distanc'd in the mad'ning race
Where'er refinement shews its hated face
Nor causeless hated; tis the peasant's curse
That hourly makes his wretched station worse;
Destroys lifes intercourse, the social plan
That rank to rank cements, as man to man,

Wealth flows around him; fashion lordly reigns
Yet poverty is his, and mental pains;
Methinks I hear the mourner thus impart
The stifled murmurs of his wounded heart
'Whense comes this change—ungracious, irksome, cold,
'Whense the new grandure that mine eyes behold?
The widening distance which I daily see
Has wealth done this?—then wealth's a foe to me!
Foe to our rights—that leaves a powrful few
The paths of emulation to persue
For emulation stoops to us no more
The hope of humble industry is o'er
The blameless hope—the cheering sweet presage
Of future comforts for declining age.
Can my sons share from this paternal hand
The profits with the labours of the land?
No—though indulgent Heav'n its blessing deigns
Where's the small Farm, to suit my scanty means?
Content, the poet sings, with us resides,
In lonely Cots like mine the Damsel hides
And will he then in raptur'd visions tell
That sweet Content with Want can ever dwell?
A barley loaf tis true my table crowns
That, fast deminishing in lusty rounds
Stops Nature's cravings—yet her sighs will flow
From knowing this—that once it was not so.
Our annual feast when earth her plenty yields
When crown'd with boughs the last load quits the fields
The aspect still of ancient joy puts on
The aspect only; with the substance gone,
The self same Horn is still at our command
But serves none other than the Plebeian hand
For homebrew'd Ale neglected and debas'd
Is quite discarded from the realms of Taste,
Where unaffected freedom charm'd the soul
The seperate table, and the costly bowl
Cool as the blast that checks the buding Spring
A mockery of gladness round them fling
For oft the Farmer ere his hearts approves
Yields up the custom which he dearly loves

Refinement forces on him like a tide
Bold innovations down its current ride
That bear no peace beneath their shewy dress,
Nor add one tittle to his happiness.
His guests selected, rank's punctilios known,
What trouble waits upon a casual frown!
Restraint's foul manacles his pleasures maim,
Selected guests selected phrases claim,
Nor reigns that joy when hand in hand they join
That good old Master felt in shaking mine!
Heav'n bless his memory! bless his honour'd name!
The poor will speak his lasting worthy fame,
To souls fair purpos'd strength and guidance give
In pity to us still let goodness live,
Let labour have its due, my Cot shall be
From chilling want and guilty murmurs free;
Let Labour have its due, then peace is mine,
And never, never shall my heart repine.

Composed between Dec^r^ 1796
and May ... 1797

Autumn.

Again the year's decline, midst storms and floods
The thundering Chace, the yellow fading woods
Invite my song that fain would boldly tell
Of upland coverts, and the echoing dell
By turns resounding loud at eve and morn
The swineherd's hallo, and the huntsman's horn.
    No more the fields with scatter'd grain supply
The restless wandring tenants of the Sty;
From oak to oak they run with eager haste
And wrangling share the first delicious taste
Of fallen Acorns; yet but thinly found
Till the strong gale hath shook them to the ground.
It comes; and roaring woods obedient wave

Their home well pleased the joint adventurorrs leave
The trudging Sow leads forth her numerous young
Playful, and white, and clean, the briers among;
Till briers and thorns increasing fence them round
Where last year's mouldring leaves bestrew the ground
And o'er their heads loud lash'd by furious squalls
Bright from their cups the ratling treasure falls;
Hot thirsty food; whence doubly sweet and cool
The wellcome margin of some rushgrown pool
The Wild-duck's lonely haunt whose jealous eye
Guards every point, who sits prepar'd to fly
On the calm bosom of her little Lake
Too closely screen'd for ruffian winds to shake
And as the bold intruders press around
At once she starts and rises with a bound.
With bristles rais'd the sudden noise they hear
And ludicrously wild and wing'd with fear
The herd decamps with more than swinish speed
And snorting dash through sedge, and rush, and reed;
Through tangling thickets headlong on they go
Then stop, and listen for their fancied foe
The hindmost still the growing [panic] spreads
Repeated frights the first alarm succeeds
Till folly's wages, wounds and thorns they reap
Yet glorying in their fortunate escape
Their groundless terrors by degrees soon cease
And nights dark reign restores their wonted peace
For now the gale subsides, and from each bough
The roosting pheasants short but frequent crow
Invites to rest and hudling side by side
The herd in closest ambush seeks to hide
Seeks some warm slope with shagged moss o'erspread
Dried leaves their copious covering and their bed
In vain may Giles through gathering glooms that fall
And solemn silence urge his piercing call
Whole days and nights they tarry midst their store
Nor quit the woods till oaks can yield no more.
    Beyond bleak Winter's rage, beyond the Spring
That rolling earth's unvarying course will bring
Who tills the ground looks on with mental eye

And sees next summer's sheaves and cloudless sky;
And even now, while natures beauty dies
Deposits seed and bids new harvests rise
Seed well prepar'd, and warmd with glowing lime
'Gainst earth-bred grubs, and cold, and lapse of time
For searching frosts and various ills invade
While wintry months depress the springing blade.
The plough moves heavily, and strong the soil
And clogging harrows with augmented toil
Dive deep; and clinging mixes with the mould
A fatning treasure from the nightly fold
And all the Cowyard's highly-valued store
That late bestrew'd the blacken'd surfice o'er.
No idling hours are here, when Fancy trims
Her dancing taper over outstretch'd limbs
And in her thousand thousand colours drest
Plays round the grassey couch of noontide rest:
Here Giles for hours of indolence attones
With strong exertion and with weary bones
And knows no leisure ... till the distant chime
Of sabbath bells he hears at sermon time
That down the brook sound sweetly in the gale
Or strike the rising hill or scim the dale.
    Nor Giles alone the sweets of leisure taste
Kind rest extends to all; … save one poor beast
That true to time an[d] place is doom'd to plod
To bring the Pastor to the House of God
Mean structure where no dust of Hero's lie
The rude inelegance of poverty
Reigns here alone: else why that roof of straw?
Those narrow windows with the frequent flaw?
O'er whose low cells the dock and mallow spreads
And rampant nettles lift their spiry heads
Whilst from the hollows of the tower on high
The greycap'd Daws in saucy legions fly.
    Round these lone walls assembling neighbours meet
And tread departed friends beneath their feet
And new-brier'd graves that prompt the secret sigh
Show each the spot where he himself must lie.
    Midst timely greetings village news goes round

Of crops late shorn, or, crops that deck the ground
Experienc'd ploughmen in the circle join
While sturdy Boys in feats of strength to shine
With pride elate their young associates brave
To jump from hollow-sounding grave to grave
Then close consulting each his tallent lends
To plan fresh sports when tedious service ends.
Hither at times with chearfulness of soul
Sweet village Maids from neighbouring hamlets stroll
That like the light heeld Doe o'er lawns that rove
Look shily curious; ripening into love;
For love's their errand, and the rose that blow
On either cheek with heightend lustre glow
When conscious of their charms e'en age looks sly
And rapture beams from youth's observent eye.
    The Pride of such a party, nature's pride,
Was lovely Poll, who innocently tried
With Hat of airy shape and ribbands gay
Love to inspire, and stand in Hymens way
But ere her twentieth Summer could expand
Or youth was renderd happy with her hand.
Her mind's serennity was lost and gone
Her eye grew languid and she wept alone
Yet causeless seemd her grief, for quick restrain'd
Mirth followd loud, or indignation reign'd
Whims wild and simple led her from her home
The heath, the Common, or the fields to roam
Terror and Joy alternate ruled her hours
Now blithe she sung and gathered useless flowe'rs
Now pluckd a tender twig from every bough
To whip the hovering Demons from her brow.
Ill-fated Maid! thy guiding spark is fled
And lasting wretchedness waits round thy bed;
Thy bed of straw! for mark where even now
Oer their lost child afflicted parents bow
Their woe she knows not but perversely coy
Inverted customs yield a sullen joy
Her midnight meals in secresy she takes
Low mutt'ring to the moon, that rising breaks
Through nights dark glooms; oh how much more forlorn

Her night, that knows of no returning dawn!
Slow from the threshold, once her infant seat
O'er the cold earth she crawls to her retreat
Quitting the cott's warm walls in filth to lie
Where the swine grunting yields up half his sty
The damp night air her shivring limbs assails
In dreams she moans, and fancied wrongs bewails
When morning wakes none earlier rous'd than she
When pendant drops fall glit'ring from the tree
But nought her rayless melancholy chears
Or sooths her breast or stops her streaming tears
Her matted locks unornamented flow
Clasping her knees and waving to and fro,
Her head bow'd down her faded cheek to hide;
A piteous mourner by the pathway side.
Some tufted molehill through the livelong day
She calls her throne, there weeps her life away:
And oft the gaily passing stranger stays
His well-timed step, and takes a silent gaze
Till sympathetic drops unbidden start
And pangs quick spring[ing] muster round his heart
And soft he treads with other gazers round
And fain would catch her sorrow's plaintive sound
One word alone is all that strikes the ear
One short, pathetic, simple word—"Oh dear!"
A thousand times repeated to the wind
That wafts the sigh, but leaves the pang behind!
For ever of the proffer'd parly shy
She hears th' unwellcome foot advancing nigh
Nor quite unconscious of her wretched plight
Gives one sad look and hurries out of sight.
    Fair promised sunbeams of terestrial bliss
Health's gallant hopes,—and are ye sunk to this?
For in life's road though thorns abundant grow
There still are joys poor Poll can never know
Joys which the gay companions of her prime
Sip, as they drift along the stream of time
At eve to hear beside their tranquil home
The lifted latch that speaks the lover come
That love matured, and playfull on the knee

To press the velvet lip of infancy;
To stay the tottering step, the features trace
Inestimable sweets of social peace!
O Thou, who bidst the vernal juices rise!
Thou, on whose blasts autumnal foliage flies
Let peace near leave me nor my heart grow cold
Whilst life and sanity are mine to hold.
Shorn of their flow'rs that shed th'untreasur'd seed
The withering pasture and the fading mead
Less tempting grown, deminish more and more
The dairy's pride sweet Summer's flowing store.
New cares succeed and gentle duties press
Where the fire side a school of tenderness
Revives the languid chirp, and warms the blood
Of cold-nipt weaklings of the latter brood
That from the shell just bursting into day
Through yard or pond persue their ventrous way.
Far weightier cares and wider scenes expand,
What devastation marks the new sown land!
"From hungry woodland foes go, Giles, and gaurd
The rising wheat; ensure its great reward
A future sustenance, a summers pride
Demand thy vigilence; then be it try'd
Exert thy voice, and wield thy shotless gun
Go, tarry there from morn till seting sun."
Keen blows the blast, or ceaseless rain descends
The half-stript hedge a sory shelter lends.
O for a Hovel, e'er so small or low
Whose roof, repelling winds and early snow,
Might bring home's comforts fresh before his eyes
No sooner thought than, lo! the structure rise.
In some sequester'd nook embank'd around
Sods for its walls, and straw in burdens bound
Dried fuel hoarded is his richest store
And circling smoke obscures his little door
Whence creeping forth to duty's call he yields
And strolls the Crusoe of the lonely fields.
On whitethorns tow'ring and the leafless rose,
A frost nipt feast in bright vermilion glows:
Where clustring sloes in glossy order rise

He crops the loaded branch, a cumbrous prize;
And o'er the flame the sputt'ring fruit he rests
And place green sods to seat his coming guests
His guests by promise; playmates young and gay
But ah! fresh pastimes lure their steps away!
He sweeps his hearth and homward looks in vain
Till feeling dissappointment's cruel pain
His fairy revels are exchanged for rage
His banquet marr'd, grown dull his hermitage.
The field becomes his prison, till on high
Benighted Birds to shades and coverts fly.
Midst air, health, daylight, can he pris'ner be?
If fields are prisons where is Liberty?
Here still she dwells and here her votaries stroll
But dissappointed hope untunes the soul
Restraints unfelt whilst hours of rapture flow
When troubles press to chains and barriers grow.
Look then from trivial up to greater woes
From the poor bird-boy with his roasted sloes
To where the dungeon'd mourner heaves the sigh
Where not one chearing sunbeam meets his eye.
Though ineffectual pity thine may be
No wealth, no pow'r, to set the captive free
Though only to thy ravish'd sight is given
The golden path that Howard trod to Heav'n.
Thy slights can make the wretched more forlorn
And deeper drive affliction's barbed thorn.
Say not, "I'll come and chear thy gloomy cell
With news of dearest friends, how good, how well:
I'll be a joyfull herald to thine heart:"
Then fail, and play the worthless trifler's part
To sip flat pleasures from thy glass's brim
And waste the precious hour that's due to him.
In mercy spare the base unmanly blow,
Where can he turn; to whom complain of you?
Back to past joys in vain his thoughts may stray
Trace and retrace the beaten worn-out way
The rankling injury will pierce his breast
And curses on thee break his midnight rest.
    Bereft of song and ever cheering green

The soft endearments of the Summer scene
New harmony pervades the solemn wood
Dear to the soul, and healthful to the blood
For bold exertion follows on the sound
Of distant Sportsmen and the chiding Hound
First heard from kennel bursting mad with joy
Where smiling Euston boasts her good Fitzroy,
Lord of pure alms and gifts that wide extend
The farmer's patron, and the poor man's friend:
Whose Mansion glit'ring with the eastern ray
Whose elevated temple points the way
Oer slopes and lawns the park's extensive pride
To where the victims of the chace reside
Ingulph'd in earth in conscious safety warm
Till lo! a plot portends their coming harm.
    In earliest hours of dark unhooded morn
Ere yet one rosy cloud bespeaks the dawn
Whilst far abroad the Fox persues his prey
He's doom'd to risk the perils of the day,
From his strong hold block'd out perhaps to bleed
Or owe his life to fortune, or to speed.
For now the pack impatient rushing on
Range through the darkest coverts one by one
Trace every spot; whilst down each noble glade
That guides the eye beneath a changful shade
The loitering sportsman feels th' instinctive flame
And checks his steed to mark the springing game.
Midst intersecting cuts and winding ways
The huntsman cheers his dogs, and anxious stays
Where every narrow winding, even shorn
Gives back the echo of his mellow horn:
Till fresh and lightsome, every pow'r untried,
The starting fugitive leaps by his side
His lifted finger to his ear he plies
And the view hallo bids a chorus rise
Of dogs quick-mouth'd, and shouts that mingle loud
As bursting thunder rolls from cloud to cloud.
With ears crop'd short, and chest of vigorous mould
Oer ditch o'er fence unconquerably bold
The shining Courcer lengthens every bound

And his strong foot-locks suck the moisten'd ground
As from the confines of the wood they pour
And joyous villages partake the roar.
O'er heath far-stretch'd, or down, or valley low,
The stiff-limb'd peasant glorying in the show,
Persues in vain; where Youth itself soon tire
Spite of the transports that the chace inspire;
For who unmounted long can charm the eye
Or hear the music of the leading cry?
    Poor faithful Trouncer! thou canst lead no more
All thy fatigues and all thy triump's o'er!
Triumps of worth, whose honorary fame
Was still to follow true the hunted game;
Beneath enormous Oaks, Britannia's boast
In thick impenetrable coverts lost
When the warm pack in fault'ring silence stood
Thine was the note that rous'd the listning wood
Rekindling every joy with tenfold force
Through all the mazes of the tainted course
Still foremost thou the dashing stream to cross
And tempt along the animated horse
Foremost o'er Fen or level mead to pass
And sweep the show'ring dewdrops from the grass;
Then bright emerging from the mist below
To climb the woodland hill's exulting brow.
    Pride of thy race! with worth far less than thine
Full many a human leader daily shine!
Less faith, less constancy, less generous zeal;
Then no disgrace my humble verse shall feel
Where not one lying line to riches bow
Or poison'd sentiment from rancour flow
No flowers bestrew'd around ambition's carr
An honest Dog's a nobler theme by far.
Each sportsman heard the tidings with a sigh
When death's cold touch had stopt his tuneful cry;
And though high deeds and fair exalted praise
In memory liv'd, and flow'd in rustic lays;
Short was the strain of monumental woe
"Foxes, rejoice! here buried lies your foe."
    In safety hous'd, throughout nights lengthning reign

The Cock sends forth a loud and piercing strain;
More frequent, as the glooms of midnight flee,
And hours roll round that brought him liberty
When Summer's early dawn mild, clear, and bright,
Chace'd quick away the transitory night...
Hours now in darkness veil'd; yet loud the scream
Of Geese impatient for the playfull stream;
And all the feather'd tribes imprison'd raise
Their morning notes of inharmonious praise
And many a clam'rous Hen and Capon gay
When daylight slowly through the fog breaks way
Fly wontonly abroad: but ah, how soon
The shades of twilight follow hazy noon
Shortning the busy day! ... day that slides by
Amidst th'unfinish'd toils of Husbandry;
Toils still each morn resumed with double care
To meet the icy terrors of the year;
To meet the threats of Boreas undismay'd
And Winter's gathering frowns and hoary head.
    Then wellcome, Cold; wellcome, ye snowy nights!
Heav'n midst your rage shall mingle pure delights
And confidence of hope the soul sustain
While devastation sweeps along the plain:
Nor shall the child of poverty despair,
But bless the power that rules the changing year;
Assur'd,—though horrors round his cottage reign
That Spring will come, and Nature smile again.

Composed between May and Nov, 1797

Winter.

With kindred pleasures moved, and cares opprest,
Sharing alike our weariness and rest
Who lives the daily partner of our hours
Through every change of heat, and frost, and show'ers;

Partakes our chearful meals, or burns with thirst
In mutual labour, and in mutual trust,
The kindly intercourse will ever prove
A bond of amity and social love.
To more than man this generous warmth extends
And oft the team and shive'ring herd befriends
Tender solicitude the bosom fills
And pity executes what reason wills:
Youth learns compassion's tale from every tongue
And flies to aid the helpless and the young;
When now unsparing as the scourge of war
Blasts follow blasts, and groves dissmantled roar
Around their home dependant Cattle low
No nourishment in frozen pastures grow
Yet frozen pastures every morn resound
With fair abundance thundring to the ground.
For though on hoary twigs no buds peep out
And e'en the hardy Bramble ceace to sprout
Beneath dread Winter's level sheets of snow
The sweet nutritious Turnip deigns to grow,
Till now imperious want and wide-spread darth
Bid labour claim her treasures from the earth.
On Giles, and such as Giles the labour falls
To strew the frequent load where hunger calls.
On driving gales sharp hail indignant flies
Or sleet more irksome still asails his eyes
Snow clogs his feet, or if no snow is seen
The field with all its juicy store to screen
Deep goes the frost, 'till every root is found
A rolling mass of ice upon the ground.
No tender ewe can break her nightly fast
Nor heifer strong begin the cold repast
Till Giles with pond'rous beetle foremost go
And scat'ring splinters fly at every blow;
When pressing round him eager for the prize
From their mix'd breath warm exhalations rise
    If now In beaded rows drops deck the spray
While Phoebus grants a momentary ray
Let but a cloud's broad shadow intervene
And stiffin'd into gems the drops are seen;

And down the furrow'd oak's broad southern side
Streams of dissolving rime no longer glide.
Though Night approaching bids the world prepare
Still the flail echoes through the frosty air
Nor stops till deepest shades of darkness come
Sending at length the weary labourer home.
From him with bed and nightly food supplied
Throughout the yard hous'd round on every side
Deep-plunging Cows their rustling feast enjoy
And snatch sweet mouthfulls from the passing boy
Who moves unseen beneath his trailing load
Fills the tall racks, and leaves a scatter'd road;
Where oft the swine from ambush warm and dry
Bolt out and scamper headlong to his sty
When Giles with wellknown voice allready there
Deigns them a portion of his evening care.
Him, though the cold may pierce, and storms molest,
Succeeding hours shall chear with warmth and rest:
Gladness to spread, and raise the grateful smile
He hurls the faggot bursting from the pile,
And many a log and rifted trunk conveys
To heap the fire and extend the blaze
That quivring strong through each apperture flies
Whilst smoak in collams unobstructed rise.
For the rude architect, unknown to fame
Nor symetry nor elegance his aim
Who spread his floors of solid oak on high
On beams roughhewn from age to age that lie
Bade his wide fabric unimpair'd sustain
Pomona's store, and Cheese, and golden grain
Bade from its central base capacious laid
The wellwrought chimney rear its lofty head
Where since hath many a savory ham been stor'd
And tempests howl'd, and Christmas gambols roar'd.
Flat on the hearth the glowing embers lie
And flames reflected dance in every eye
There the long Billet, forced at last to bend
While froathing sap gush out at either end
Throws round its wellcome heat,—the ploughman smiles
And oft the joke runs hard on sheepish Giles

Who sits joint-tennant of the corner stool
The converse sharing though in duty's school
For now attentively tis his to hear
Intorogations from the Master's chair.
'Left ye your bleating charge when daylight fled
'Near where the hay-stack lifts its snowy head
Whose fence of bushy furze so close and warm
May stop the slanting bullets of the storm.
For hark! it blows; a dark and dismal night
Heav'n guide the trav'ler's fearfull steps aright!
Now from the woods, mistrustful and sharp-eye'd
The Fox in silent darkness seems to glide
Stealing around us, listning as he goes
If chance the Cock or stamring Capon crows
Or Goose or nodding Duck should darkling cry
As if appriz'd of lurking danger nigh:
Destruction waits them, Giles, if e'er you fail
To bolt their doors against the driving gale.
Strew'd you, still mindful of th'unshelter'd head
Burdens of straw the Cattle's wellcome bed?
Thine heart should feel what thou may'st hourly see
That duty's basis is humanity.
Of pain's unsavory cup though thou may'st taste
The wrath of Winter from the bleak north-east
Thine utmost suff'rings in the coldest day
A period terminates, and joys repay.
Perhaps e'en now while here those joys we boast
Full many a bark rides down the neighbouring Coast
Where the high northern waves tremendous roar
Drove down by blasts from Norway's icy shore
The sea-boy there less fortunate than thou
Feels all thy pains in every gust that blow;
His freezing hands now drench'd, now dry, by turns;
Now lost now seen the distant light that burns
On some tall cliff uprais'd, a flaming guide
That throws its friendly radiance o'er the tide
His labours cease not with declining day
But toils and perils mark his watry way
And whilst in peaceful dreams secure we lie
The ruthless whirlwinds rage along the sky

Round his head whistling ... and shalt thou repine
While this protecting roof still shelters thine?
    Mild as the vernal show'r his words prevail
And aid the moral precept of his tale
His wond'ring hearers learn and ever keep
These first ideas of the restless deep
And as the opening mind a circuit tries
Present felicity in value rise
Increasing pleasures every hour they find
The warmth more precious and the shelter kind
Warmth that long reigning bids the eyelids close
As through the blood its balmy influence goes
When the cheer'd heart forgets fatigues and cares
And drowsiness alone dominion bears.
Sweet then the ploughman's slumbers, hale and young
When the last topic dies upon his tongue
Sweet then the bliss his trancient dreams inspire
Till chilblaines wake him, or the snapping fire:
He starts, and ever thoughtful of his team
Along the glitt'ring snow a feeble gleam
Shoots from his lantern, as he yawning goes,
To add fresh comforts to their night's repose,
Defusing fragrance as their food he moves
And pats the jolly sides of those he loves
Thus full replenish'd, perfect ease possest
From night till morn alternate food and rest
No rightfull cheer withheld, no sleep debar'd
But each days labour brings its sure reward.
Yet when from plough or lumb'ring cart set free
They taste awhile the sweets of liberty
E'en sober Dobbin lifts his clumsy heels
And kicks disdainful of the dirty wheels
But soon his frolick ended yields again
To trudge the road and wear the clinking chain.
    Short sighted Dobbin!—Thou canst only see
The trivial hardships that encompass thee
Thy chains were freedom and thy toils repose
Could the poor Post-horse tell thee all his woes
Shew thee his bleeding shoulders and unfold
The dreadful anguish he endures for gold

Hire'd at each call of business, lust, or rage
That prompt the trav'ler on from stage to stage
Still on his strength depends their boasted speed
For them his limbs grow weak, his bare ribs bleed
And though he groaning quickens at command
Their extra shilling in the rider's hand
Becomes his bitter scourge—tis he must feel
The double efforts of the lash and steel
Till when, uphill the destin'd Inn he gains
And trembling under complicated pains
Prone from his nostrils darting on the ground
His breath emitted floats in clouds around:
Drops chase each other down his chest and sides
And spatterd mud his native colour hides
Through his swoln veins the boiling torrent flows
And every nerve a separate torture knows.
His harness loos'd, he wellcomes eager eyed
The Pail's full draught that quivers by his side
And joys to see the well-known stable door
As the starv'd mariner the friendly shore.
Ah, well for him if here his sufferings ceas'd
And ample hours of rest his pains appeas'd.
But rous'd again and sternly bade to rise
And shake refreshing slumber from his eyes
Ere his exhausted spirits can return
Or through his frame reviving ardor burn
Come forth he must though limping, maim'd and sore
He hears the whip—the Chaise is at the door
The collar tightens, and again he feels
His half-heal'd wounds inflam'd again the wheels
With tiresome sameness in his ears resound
Oer blinding dust or miles of flinty ground.
Thus nightly rob'd and injur'd day by day
His piece-meal murd'rers wear his life away.
What say'st thou Dobbin? What though hounds await
With open jaws the moment of thy fate
No better fate attends his public race
His life is misery, and his end disgrace.
Then freely bear thy burden to the mill
Obey but one short law ... thy driver's will;

Affection, to thy memory ever true
Shall boast of mighty loads that Dobbin drew
And back to childhood shall the mind with pride
Recount thy gentleness in many a ride
To pond, or field, or village fair, when thou
Held high thy braided mane and comely brow
And oft the Tale shall rise to homely fame
Upon thy generous spirit and thy name.
    Though faithful to a proverb, we regard
The midnight chieftain of the farmer's yard
Beneath whose guardianship all hearts rejoice
Woke by the echo of his hollow voice:
Yet as the Hound may fault'ring quit the pack
Snuff the foul scent, and hasten yelping back
And e'en the docile Pointer know disgrace
Thwarting the gen'ral instinct of his race
E'en so the Mastiff, or the meaner Cur
At times will from the path of duty err
A pattern of fidelity by day
By night a murd'rer, lurking for his prey
And round the pastures or the fold will creep
And coward-like attack the peaceful sheep:
Alone the wanton mischief he persues
Alone in reeking blood his jaws imbrews
Chasing amain his fright'ned victims round
Till death in wild confusion strews the ground
Then wearied out, to kennel sneaks away
And licks his guilty paws till break of day.
    The deed discover'd and the news once spread
Vengence hangs o'er the unknown culprit's head
And careful Shepherds extra hours bestow
In patient watchings for the common foe
A foe most dreaded now, when rest and peace
Should wait the Season of the Flock's increase.
    In part these nightly terrors to dispel
Giles e'er he sleeps his little flock must tell
From the fire-side with many a shrug he hies
Glad if the full-orb'd Moon salutes his eyes
And through the unbroken stillness of the night
Shed on his path her beams of cheering light.

With saun'tring step he climbs the distant stile
Whilst all around him wears a placid smile
There views the white-rob'd clouds in clusters driv'n
And all the glorious pageantry of heav'n
Low, on the utmost bound'ry of the sight
The rising vapours catch the silver light
Thence fancy measures, as they parting fly
Which first will throw its shadow on the eye
Passing the source of light and thence away
Succeeded quick by brighter still than they.
Far yet above these wafted clouds are seen
In a remoter sky, still more serene
Others detatch'd in ranges through the air
Spotless as snow and countless as they're fair
Scatterd immensely wide from east to west
The beauteous semblance of a Flock at rest.
These to the raptur'd mind aloud proclaim
Their mighty Shepherd's everlasting name.
Whilst thus the loit'rer's utmost stretch of soul
Climbs the still clouds or traverse those that roll
And loos'd imagination soaring goes
High o'er his home and all his little woes
Time glides away; neglected duty calls
At once from plains of light to earth he falls
And down a narrow Lane well-known by day
With all his speed persues his sounding way
In thought still half absorb'd, and chill'd with cold
When lo! an object frightful to behold
A grisly Spectre cloathd in silver-grey
Around whose feet the waving shadows plays
Stands in his path!—He stops and not a breath
Heaves from his heart, that sinks almost to death.
Loud the Owl hallows o'er his head unseen
All else is silent, dismally serene:
Some prompt ejaculation, whisper'd low
Yet bears him up against the threat'ning foe
And thus poor Giles, though half inclin'd to fly
Mutters his doubts, and strains his steadfast eye.
    Tis not my crimes thou comest here to reprove
No murders stain my soul, no perjur'd love

If thou'rt indeed what here thou seemst to be
Thy dreadful mission cannot reach to me.
By parents taught still to mistruct mine eyes
Still to approach each object of surprise,
Lest Fancy's formfull visions should deceive,
In moonlight paths, or glooms of falling eve
This then's the moment when my heart should try
To scan thy motionless deformity
But oh, the fearfull task! yet well I know
An aged Ash, with many a spreading bough,
Beneath whose leaves I've found a Summer's bow'r
Beneath whose trunk I've weather'd many a show'r
Stands singly down this solitary way
But far beyond where now my footsteps stay.
Tis true, thus far I've come with heedless haste,
No reconing kept, no passing object trac'd.—
And can I then have reach'd that very tree?
Or is its reverend form assum'd by thee?
The happy thought alleviates his pain
He creeps another step, then stops again
Till slowly, as his noiseless feet draw near
Its perfect leaniments at once appear
Its crown of shiv'ring Ivy whispering peace
And its white bark that fronts the Moon's pale face.
Now, whilst his blood mount upward, now he knows
The solid gain that from conviction flows
And strengthen'd confidence shall hence fullfill
With conscious innocence, more valued still,
The dreariest task that winter nights can bring
In churchyard dark, or Grove, or fairy ring
Still buoying up the timid mind of youth
Till loitering Reason hoists the scale of truth.
With these blest guardians Giles his course persues
Till numbering his heavy-sided ewes
Surrounding stillness tranquilise his breast
And shape the dreams that wait his hours of rest.
    As when retreating tempests we behold
Whose skirts at length the azure sky unfold
And full of murmurings and mingled wrath
Slowly unshroud the smiling face of earth

Bringing the bosom joy: so Winter flies—
And as the source of life and light uprise
A height'ning arch oer southern hills he bends
Warm on the cheek the slanting beam descends
And gives the reeking mead a brighter hue
And draws the modest primrose-bud to view.
Yet frosts succeed and winds impetuous rush
And hail-storms rattle through the budding bush;
And night-fall'n Lambs require the shepherd's care
And teeming Ewes that still their burdens bare
Beneath whose sides tomorrow's dawn may see
The milkwhite stranger bow the trembling knee
First at whose birth the pow'rfull instinct's seen
That fills with champions the daisied green
For ewes that stood aloof with fearful eye
With stamping foot now men and dogs defy
And obstinately faithfull to their young
Guard their first steps to join the bleating throng.
    But casualties and death from damps and cold
Will still attend the well-conducted fold:
Her tender offspring dead, the dam aloud
Calls and runs wild amidst th'unconscious croud
And orphan'd sucklings raise the piteous cry
No wool to warm them no defenders nigh.
And must her streaming milk then flow in vain?
Must unregarded innocents complain?
No—ere this strong solicitude subside
Paternal fondness may be fresh apply'd
And the adopted stripling still may find
A parent most assiduously kind.
For this he's doom'd awhile disguised to range
For fraud or force must work the wish'd-for change
For this his predecessor's skin he wears
Till cheated into tenderness and cares
The unsuspecting dam, contented grown
Cherish and guard the fondling as her own.
    Thus all by turns to fair perfection rise
Thus twins are parted to increase their size
Thus instinct yields as interest points the way
Till the bright flock augmenting every day

On sunny hills and vales of springing flow'rs
With ceaseless clamour greet the vernal hours.
    The humbler Shepherd here with joy beholds
Th'approv'd economy of crouded folds,
And in his small contracted round of cares
Adjusts the practice of each hint he hears
For boys with emulation learn to glow
And boast their pastures, and their healthful show
Of well grown Lambs, the glory of the Spring
And field to field in competition bring.
    E'en Giles for all his cares and watchings past
And all his contests with the wintry blast
Claims his full share of that sweet praise bestow'd
By gazing neighbours when along the road
Or Village green his curly-coated throng
Suspends the chorus of the spinner's song
When admiration's unaffected grace
Lisps from the tongue, and beams in ev'ry face:
Delightful moments! ... sunshine, health, and joy,
Play round and cheer the elevated boy.
Another Spring! his heart exulting cries
Another year with promis'd blessings rise! ...
Eternal Power! from whom those blessings flow
Teach me still more to wonder, more to know;
Seedtime and harvest let me see again
Pierce the dark wood, and brave the sultry plain;
Let Field, and dimpled Brook, and flow'r, and Tree,
Here round my home still lift my soul to thee:
And let me ever midst thy bounties raise
An humble note of thankfullness and praise.

Finishd, Aprill 22. 1798.—
Rob Bloomfield

FROM RURAL TALES (1802)

From the Preface (1802)

The Poems here offered to the public were chiefly written during the interval between the concluding, and the publishing of THE FARMER'S BOY, an interval of nearly two years. The pieces of a later date are, the Widow to her Hour-Glass, the Fakenham Ghost, Walter and Jane, &c. At the time of publishing the Farmer's Boy, circumstances occurred which rendered it necessary to submit these Poems to the perusal of my Friends: under whose approbation I now give them, with some confidence as to their moral merit, to the judgment of the Public. And as they treat of village manners, and rural scenes, it appears to me not ill-tim'd to avow, that I have hopes of meeting in some degree the approbation of my Country. I was not prepar'd for the decided, and I may surely say extraordinary attention which the Public has shewn towards the Farmer's Boy: the consequence has been such as my true friends will rejoice to hear; it has produc'd me many essential blessings. And I feel peculiarly gratified in finding that a poor man in England may assert the dignity of Virtue, and speak of the imperishable beauties of Nature, and be heard, and heard, perhaps, with greater attention for his being poor.

Preface to Poems (1809), Volume II

What now forms the first part of this Volume, was published in 1802 under the title of 'Rural Tales,' and the remainder in 1806 under the name of 'Wild Flowers'. Several pieces in the first collection, which the Public have sanctioned by a long and generous approbation, were written before the publication of the 'Farmer's Boy;' and consequently before I had friends to thank, or failures to dread. The original MSS. of these Poems are now in my possession, and I find therein, that seven years ago, I made memorandums which are now useful. Two or three of these detached sentences, as they are unvarnished truths, may afford amusement:—

'Remember having a great conceit of the "Miller's Maid;"—but of "Richard and Kate" I expected to hear a different account; was afraid it might be too low, as the critics call it, though for the life of me I can't tell what they mean by it. - - - - - - Began to think of the pleasure of an old couple meeting their grown-up children, and accordingly composed, or rather they composed themselves, the stanzas containing Richard's speech to his Sons and Daughters, which always pleased me best of any in the Ballad; I then began the opening of the Ballad, and filled up the chinks; for I had arranged two or three stanzas descriptive of their journey, particularly the ninth and tenth.

When I began the "Miller's Maid" I had no thought of making so long, or so good, a story of it. Had not thought of any plot or developement, but first of all wrote the girl's story, to try how far I could make a child's language touch my own feelings. The execrable usage of some Workhouse-Children, as stated in the newspapers, gave the thought at first. This plan was enlarged till it became the favourite of my heart, and cost me more tears than all the rest.

"The Widow," though it stands next in the printed copies, was not written next; it has nothing remarkable belonging to it, but that it is the only piece in the book which was written quick. Had an Hour-glass before me; my wife singing softly; my girls at school. Made a shoe between dinner and tea-time, and composed the "Widow" beside.'

The Reader will perceive, from these specimens, the design and tenor of my entries; they were private: and he is not troubled with them entirely without cause. Inquiries, such as these memorandums are calculated to satisfy, have often been made; and as the parties are as welcome to the Anecdotes as to the Poems, I find this the most ready and general way of compliance. It will also be recollected, that I am not here writing for the purpose of introducing the Poems to notice; they are already known, and must stand or fall by themselves, in spite of this or any other kind of Preface.

Robert Bloomfield. City Road, March, 1809.

RICHARD AND KATE; OR, FAIR-DAY. A SUFFOLK BALLAD

I.

‘Come, Goody, stop your humdrum wheel,
Sweep up your orts, and get your hat;
Old joys reviv’d once more I feel,
’Tis Fair-day;—ay, and more than that.

II.

Have you forgot, Kate, prithee say,
How many Seasons here we’ve tarried?
’Tis Forty years, this very day,
Since you and I, old Girl, were married!

III.

Look out; the Sun shines warm and bright,
The Stiles are low, the Paths all dry;
I know you cut your corns last night:
Come; be as free from care as I.

IV.

For I’m resolv’d once more to see
That place where we so often met;
Though few have had more cares than we,
We’ve none just now to make us fret.’

V.

Kate scorn’d to damp the generous flame
That warm’d her aged Partner’s breast:
Yet, ere determination came,
She thus some trifling doubts express’d:

VI.

‘Night will come on; when seated snug,
And you’ve perhaps begun some tale,
Can you then leave your dear stone mug;
Leave all the folks, and all the ale?’

VII.

'Ay, Kate, I wool;—because I know,
Though time has been we both could run,
Such days are gone and over now;—
I only mean to see the fun.'

VIII.

She straight slipp'd off the Wall and Band,
And laid aside her Lucks and Twitches:
And to the Hutch she reach'd her hand,
And gave him out his Sunday Breeches.

IX.

His Mattock he behind the door
And Hedging-gloves again replac'd;
And look'd across the yellow Moor,
And urg'd his tott'ring Spouse to haste.

X.

The day was up, the air serene,
The Firmament without a cloud;
The Bee humm'd o'er the level green,
Where knots of trembling Cowslips bow'd.

XI.

And Richard thus, with heart elate,
As past things rush'd across his mind,
Over his shoulder talk'd to Kate,
Who, snug tuckt up, walk'd slow behind.

XII.

'When once a giggling Mawther you,
And I a red-fac'd chubby Boy,
Sly tricks you play'd me not a few;
For mischief was your greatest joy.

XIII.

Once, passing by this very Tree,
A Gotch of Milk I'd been to fill,
You shoulder'd me; then laugh'd to see
Me and my Gotch spin down the Hill.'

XIV.

''Tis true,' she said; 'But here behold,
And marvel at the course of Time;
Though you and I are both grown old,
This Tree is only in its prime!'

XV.

'Well, Goody, don't stand preaching now;
Folks don't preach Sermons at a Fair:
We've rear'd Ten Boys and Girls you know;
And I'll be bound they'll all be there.'

XVI.

Now friendly nods and smiles had they,
From many a kind Fair-going face:
And many a pinch Kate gave away,
While Richard kept his usual pace.

XVII.

At length arriv'd amidst the throng,
Grand-children bawling hemm'd them round;
And dragg'd them by the skirts along
Where gingerbread bestrew'd the ground.

XVIII.

And soon the aged couple spy'd
Their lusty Sons, and Daughters dear: —
When Richard thus exulting cried,
'Did'nt I tell you they'd be here?'

XIX.

The cordial greetings of the soul
Were visible in every face:
Affection, void of all controul,
Govern'd with a resistless grace.

XX.

'Twas good to see the honest strife,
Which should contribute most to please;
And hear the long-recounted life,
Of infant tricks, and happy days.

XXI.

But now, as at some nobler places,
Amongst the Leaders 'twas decreed
Time to begin the Dicky Races;
More fam'd for laughter than for speed.

XXII.

Richard look'd on with wond'rous glee,
And prais'd the Lad who chanc'd to win;
'Kate, wa'n't I such a one as he?
As like him, ay, as pin to pin.

XXIII.

Full Fifty years are pass'd away
Since I rode this same ground about;
Lord! I was lively as the day!
'I won the High-lows out and out!

XXIV.

I'm surely growing young again:
I feel myself so kedge and plump.
From head to foot I've not one pain;
Nay, hang me if I cou'dn't jump.'

XXV.

Thus spoke the Ale in Richard's pate,
A very little made him mellow;
But still he lov'd his faithful Kate,
Who whisper'd thus, 'My good old fellow,

XXVI.

Remember what you promis'd me
And see, the Sun is getting low;
The Children want an hour ye see
To talk a bit before we go.'

XXVII.

Like youthful Lover most complying
He turn'd, and chuckt her by the chin:
Then all across the green grass hying,
Right merry faces, all akin.

XXVIII.

Their farewell quart, beneath a tree
That droop'd its branches from above,
Awak'd the pure felicity
That waits upon Parental Love.

XXIX.

Kate view'd her blooming Daughters round,
And Sons, who shook her wither'd hand:
Her features spoke what joy she found;
But utterance had made a stand.

XXX.

The Children toppled on the green,
And bowl'd their fairings down the hill;
Richard with pride beheld the scene,
Nor could he for his life sit still.

XXXI.

A Father's uncheck'd feelings gave
A tenderness to all he said;
'My Boys, how proud am I to have
My name thus round the country spread!

XXXII.

Through all my days I've labour'd hard,
And could of pains and crosses tell;
But this is Labour's great reward,
To meet ye thus, and see ye well.

XXXIII.

My good old Partner, when at home,
Sometimes with wishes mingles tears;
Goody, says I, let what wool come,
We've nothing for them but our pray'rs.

XXXIV.

May you be all as old as I,
And see your Sons to manhood grow;
And, many a time before you die,
Be just as pleas'd as I am now.'

XXXV.

Then, (raising still his Mug and Voice,)
'An Old Man's weakness don't despise!
I love you well, my Girls and Boys;
God bless you all;'—so said his eyes—

XXVI.

For as he spoke, a big round drop
Fell, bounding on his ample sleeve;
A witness which he could not stop,
A witness which all hearts believe.

XXVII.

Thou, Filial Piety, wert there;
And round the ring, benignly bright,
Dwelt in the luscious half-shed tear,
And in the parting word—Good Night!

XXVIII.

With thankful Hearts and strengthen'd Love,
The poor old Pair, supremely blest,
Saw the Sun sink behind the grove,
And gain'd once more their lowly rest.

THE WIDOW TO HER HOUR-GLASS

I.

Come, friend, I'll turn thee up again:
Companion of the lonely hour!
Spring thirty times hath fed with rain
And cloth'd with leaves my humble bower,
Since thou hast stood
In frame of wood,
On Chest or Window by my side:
At every Birth still thou wert near,
Still spoke thine admonitions clear—
And, when my Husband died,

II.

I've often watch'd thy streaming sand
And seen the growing Mountain rise,
And often found Life's hopes to stand
On props as weak in Wisdom's eyes:
Its conic crown
Still sliding down,
Again heap'd up, then down again;
The sand above more hollow grew,
Like days and years still filt'ring through,
And mingling joy and pain.

III.

While thus I spin and sometimes sing
(For now and then my heart will glow)
Thou measur'st Time's expanding wing:
By thee the noontide hour I know:
Though silent thou,
Still shalt thou flow,
And jog along thy destin'd way:
But when I glean the sultry fields,
When Earth her yellow Harvest yields,
Thou get'st a Holiday.

IV.

Steady as Truth, on either end
Thy daily task performing well,
Thou'rt Meditation's constant friend,
And strik'st the Heart without a Bell:
Come, lovely May!
Thy lengthen'd day
Shall gild once more my native plain;
Curl inward here, sweet Woodbine flower;—
Companion of the lonely hour,
I'll turn thee up again.

THE FAKENHAM GHOST. A BALLAD

I.

The Lawns were dry in Euston Park;
(Here Truth inspires my Tale)
The lonely footpath, still and dark,
Led over Hill and Dale.

II.

Benighted was an ancient Dame,
And fearful haste she made
To gain the vale of Fakenham,
And hail its Willow shade.

III.

Her footsteps knew no idle stops,
But follow'd faster still;
And echo'd to the darksome Copse
That whisper'd on the Hill;

IV.

Where clam'rous Rooks, yet scarcely hush'd,
Bespoke a peopled shade;
And many a wing the foliage brush'd,
And hov'ring circuits made.

V.

The dappled herd of grazing Deer
That sought the Shades by day,
Now started from her path with fear,
And gave the Stranger way.

VI.

Darker it grew; and darker fears
Came o'er her troubled mind;
When now, a short quick step she hears
Come patting close behind.

VII.

She turn'd; it stopt!—nought could she see
Upon the gloomy plain!
But, as she strove the Sprite to flee,
She heard the same again.

VIII.

Now terror seiz'd her quaking frame:
For, where the path was bare,
The trotting Ghost kept on the same!
She mutter'd many a pray'r.

IX.

Yet once again, amidst her fright
She tried what sight could do;
When through the cheating glooms of night,
A Monster stood in view.

X.

Regardless of whate'er she felt,
It follow'd down the plain!
She own'd her sins, and down she knelt,
And said her pray'rs again.

XI.

Then on she sped: and Hope grew strong,
The white park-gate in view;
Which pushing hard, so long it swung
That Ghost and all pass'd through.

XII.

Loud fell the gate against the post!
Her heart-strings like to crack:
For, much she fear'd the grisly Ghost
Would leap upon her back.

XIII.

Still on, pat, pat, the Goblin went,
As it had done before:—
Her strength and resolution spent,
She fainted at the door.

XIV.

Out came her Husband, much surpris'd:
Out came her Daughter dear:
Good-natur'd Souls! all unadvis'd
Of what they had to fear.

XV.

The Candle's gleam pierc'd through the night,
Some short space o'er the green;
And there the little trotting Sprite
Distinctly might be seen.

XVI.

An Ass's Foal had lost its Dam
Within the spacious Park;
And simple as the playful Lamb,
Had follow'd in the dark.

XVII.

No Goblin he; no imp of sin:
No crimes had ever known.
They took the shaggy stranger in,
And rear'd him as their own.

XVIII.

His little hoofs would rattle round
Upon the Cottage floor:
The Matron learn'd to love the sound
That frighten'd her before.

XIX.

A favorite the Ghost became;
And, 'twas his fate to thrive:
And long he liv'd and spread his fame,
And kept the joke alive.

XX.

For many a laugh went through the Vale;
And some conviction too:—
Each thought some other Goblin tale,
Perhaps, was just as true.

WINTER SONG

I.

Dear Boy, throw that Icicle down,
And sweep this deep snow from the door:
Old Winter comes on with a frown;
A terrible frown for the poor.
In a Season so rude and forlorn,
How can age, how can infancy bear
The silent neglect and the scorn
Of those who have plenty to spare?

II.

Fresh broach'd is my Cask of old Ale,
Well-tim'd now the frost is set in;
Here's Job come to tell us a tale,
We'll make him at home to a pin.
While my Wife and I bask o'er the fire,
The roll of the Seasons will prove,
That Time may diminish desire,
But cannot extinguish true love.

III.

O the pleasures of neighbourly chat,
If you can but keep scandal away,
To learn what the world has been at,
And what the great Orators say;
Though the Wind through the crevices sing,
And Hail down the chimney rebound;
I'm happier than many a king
While the Bellows blow Bass to the sound.

IV.

Abundance was never my lot:
But out of the trifle that's given,
That no curse may alight on my Cot,
I'll distribute the bounty of Heav'n;
The fool and the slave gather wealth:
But if I add nought to my store,
Yet while I keep conscience in health,
I've a Mine that will never grow poor.

GOOD TIDINGS; OR, NEWS FROM THE FARM (1804)

How vain this tribute; vain this lowly lay;
Yet nought is vain which gratitude inspires!
The Muse, besides, her duty thus approves
To virtue, to her country, to mankind!
Thomson

Advertisement

To the few who know that I have employed my thoughts on the importance of Dr. Jenner's discovery, it has generally and almost unexceptionably appeared a subject of little promise; peculiarly unfit indeed for poetry. My method of treating it has endeared it to myself, for it indulges in domestic anecdote. The account given of my infancy, and of my father's burial, is not only poetically, but strictly true, and with me it has its weight accordingly. I have witnessed the destruction described in my brother's family; and I have, in my own, insured the lives of four children by Vaccine Inoculation, who, I trust, are destined to look back upon the Small-pox as the scourge of days gone by.—My hopes are high, and my prayers sincere, for its universal adoption.

The few notes subjoined are chiefly from 'Woodville on Inoculation;' and if I may escape the appearance of affectation of research, or a scientific treatment of the subject, I think the egotism, so conspicuous in the poem, (as facts give force to argument,) ought to be forgiven.

Where's the Blind Child, so admirably fair,
With guileless dimples, and with flaxen hair
That waves in ev'ry breeze? he's often seen
Beside yon cottage wall, or on the green,
With others match'd in spirit and in size,
Health on their cheeks, and rapture in their eyes;
That full expanse of voice, to childhood dear,
Soul of their sports, is duly cherish'd here:
And, hark! that laugh is his, that jovial cry;
He hears the ball and trundling hoop brush by,
And runs the giddy course with all his might,

A very child in every thing but sight;
With circumscrib'd, but not abated pow'rs,—
Play! the great object of his infant hours;—
In many a game he takes a noisy part,
And shows the native gladness of his heart;
But soon he hears, on pleasure all intent,
The new suggestion and the quick assent;
The grove invites, delight thrills every breast—
To leap the ditch and seek the downy nest
Away they start, leave balls and hoops behind,
And one companion leave—the boy is blind!
His fancy paints their distant paths so gay,
That childish fortitude awhile gives way,
He feels his dreadful loss—yet short the pain,
Soon he resumes his cheerfulness again;
Pond'ring how best his moments to employ,
He sings his little songs of nameless joy,
Creeps on the warm green turf for many an hour,
And plucks by chance the white and yellow flow'r;
Smoothing their stems, while resting on his knees,
He binds a nosegay which he never sees;
Along the homeward path then feels his way,
Lifting his brow against the shining day,
And, with a playful rapture round his eyes,
Presents a sighing parent with the prize.
    She blest that day, which he remembers too,
When he could gaze on heav'n's ethereal blue,
See the green Spring, and Summer's countless dies,
And all the colours of the morning rise.—
'When was this work of bitterness begun?
How came the blindness of your only son?'
Thus pity prompts full many a tongue to say,
But never, till she slowly wipes away
Th'obtruding tear that trembles in her eye,
This dagger of a question meets reply:—
'My boy was healthy, and my rest was sound,
When last year's corn was green upon the ground:
From yonder town infection found its way;
Around me putrid dead and dying lay.
I trembled for his fate: but all my care

Avail'd not, for he breath'd the tainted air;
Sickness ensu'd—in terror and dismay
I nurs'd him in my arms both night and day,
When his soft skin from head to foot became
One swelling purple sore, unfit to name:
Hour after hour, when all was still beside,
When the pale night-light in its socket died,
Alone I sat; the thought still sooths my heart,
That surely I perform'd a mother's part,
Watching with such anxiety and pain
Till he might smile and look on me again;
But that was not to be—ask me no more:
God keep small-pox and blindness from your door!'
    Now, ye who think, whose souls abroad take wing,
And trace out human troubles to their spring,
Say, should Heav'n grant us, in some hallow'd hour,
Means to divest this demon of his power,
To loose his horrid grasp from early worth,
To spread a saving conquest round the earth,
Till ev'ry land shall bow the grateful knee,
Would it not be a glorious day to see?—
That day is come! my soul, in strength arise,
Invoke no muse, no power below the skies;
To Heav'n the energies of verse belong,
Truth is the theme, and truth shall be the song;
Arm with conviction every joyful line,
Source of all mercies, for the praise is thine!
    Sweet beam'd the star of peace upon those days
When Virtue watch'd my childhood's quiet ways,
Whence a warm spark of Nature's holy flame
Gave the farm-yard an honourable name,
But left one theme unsung: then, who had seen
In herds that feast upon the vernal green,
Or dreamt that in the blood of kine there ran
Blessings beyond the sustenance of man?
We tread the meadow, and we scent the thorn,
We hail the day-spring of a summer's morn;
Nor mead at dawning day, nor thymy heath,
Transcends the fragrance of the heifer's breath:
May that dear fragrance, as it floats along

O'er ev'ry flow'r that lives in rustic song;
May all the sweets of meadows and of kine
Embalm, O Health! this offering at thy shrine.
Dear must that moment be when first the mind,
Ranging the paths of science unconfin'd,
Strikes a new light; when, obvious to the sense,
Springs the fresh spark of bright intelligence.
So felt the towering soul of Montagu,
Her sex's glory, and her country's too;
Who gave the spotted plague one deadly blow,
And bade its mitigated poison flow
With half its terrors; yet, with loathing still,
We hous'd a visitant with pow'r to kill.
Then when the healthful blood, though often tried,
Foil'd the keen lancet by the Severn side,
Resisting, uncontaminated still,
The purple pest and unremitting skill;
When the plain truth tradition seem'd to know,
By simply pointing to the harmless Cow,
Though wise distrust to reason might appeal;
What, when hope triumph'd, what did Jenner feel!
Where even hope itself could scarcely rise
To scan the vast, inestimable prize!
Perhaps supreme, alone, triumphant stood
The great, the conscious power of doing good,
The power to will, and wishes to embrace
Th' emancipation of the human race;
A joy that must all mortal praise outlive,
A wealth that grateful nations cannot give.
Forth sped the truth immediate from his hand,
And confirmations sprung in ev'ry land;
In ev'ry land, on beauty's lily arm,
On infant softness, like a magic charm,
Appear'd the gift that conquers as it goes;
The dairy's boast, the simple, saving Rose!
Momentous triumph fiend! thy reign is o'er;
Thou, whose blind rage hath ravag'd ev'ry shore,
Whose name denotes destruction, whose foul breath
For ever hov'ring round the dart of death,
Fells, mercilessly fells, the brave and base,

Through all the kindreds of the human race.
    Who has not heard, in warm, poetic tales,
Of eastern fragrance and Arabian gales?
Bowers of delight, of languor, and repose,
Where beauty triumph'd as the song arose?
Fancy may revel, fiction boldly dare,
But truth shall not forget that thou wert there,
Scourge of the world! who, borne on ev'ry wind,
From bow'rs of roses sprang to curse mankind.
The Indian palm thy devastation knows:
Thou sweep'st the regions of eternal snows:
Climbing the mighty period of his years,
The British oak his giant bulk uprears;
He, in his strength, while toll'd the passing bell,
Rejoic'd whole centuries as thy victims fell:
Armies have bled, and shouts of vict'ry rung,
Fame crown'd their deaths, thy deaths are all unsung:
'Twas thine, while victories claim'd th'immortal lay,
Through private life to cut thy desp'rate way;
And when full power the wond'rous magnet gave
Ambition's sons to dare the ocean wave,
Thee, in their train of horrid ills, they drew
Beneath the blessed sunshine of Peru.
But why unskill'd th' historic page explore?
Why thus pursue thee to a foreign shore?
A homely narrative of days gone by,
Familiar griefs, and kindred's tender sigh,
Shall still survive; for thou on ev'ry mind
Hast left some traces of thy wrath behind.
    There dwelt, beside a brook that creeps along
Midst infant hills and meads unknown to song,
One to whom poverty and faith were giv'n,
Calm village silence, and the hope of heav'n:
Alone she dwelt; and while each morn brought peace,
And health was smiling on her years' increase,
Sudden and fearful, rushing through her frame,
Unusual pains and feverish symptoms came.
Then, when debilitated, faint, and poor,
How sweet to hear a footstep at her door!
To see a neighbour watch life's silent sand,

To hear the sigh, and feel the helping hand!
Soon woe o'erspread the interdicted ground,
And consternation seiz'd the hamlets round:
Uprose the pest—its widow'd victim died;
And foul contagion spread on ev'ry side;
The helping neighbour, for her kind regard,
Bore home that dreadful tribute of reward,
Home, where six children, yielding to its pow'r,
Gave hope and patience a most trying hour;
One at her breast still drew the living stream,
And sense of danger never marr'd his dream;
Yet all exclaim'd, and with a pitying eye
'Whoe'er survives the shock, that child will die!'
But vain the fiat,—Heav'n restor'd them all,
And destin'd one of riper years to fall.
Midnight beheld the close of all his pain,
His grave was clos'd when midnight came again;
No bell was heard to toll, no funeral pray'r,
No kindred bow'd, no wife, no children there;
Its horrid nature could inspire a dread
That cut the bonds of custom like a thread.
The humble church-tow'r higher seem'd to show,
Illumin'd by their trembling light below;
The solemn night-breeze struck each shiv'ring cheek;
Religious reverence forbade to speak:
The starting Sexton his short sorrow chid
When the earth murmur'd on the coffin lid,
And falling bones and sighs of holy dread
Sounded a requiem to the silent dead!
'Why tell us tales of woe, thou who didst give
Thy soul to rural themes, and bade them live?
What means this zeal of thine, this kindling fire?
The rescu'd infant and the dying sire?'
Kind heart, who o'er the pictur'd Seasons glow'd,
When smiles approv'd the verse, or tears have flow'd,
Was then the lowly minstrel dear to thee?
Himself appeals—What, if that child were he!
What, if those midnight sighs a farewell gave,
While hands, all trembling, clos'd his father's grave
Though love enjoin'd not infant eyes to weep,

In manhood's zenith shall his feelings sleep?
Sleep not, my soul! indulge a nobler flame;
Still the destroyer persecutes thy name.
Sev'n winters cannot pluck from mem'ry's store
That mark'd affliction which a brother bore;
That storm of trouble bursting on his head,
When the fiend came, and left two children dead!
Yet, still superior to domestic woes,
The native vigour of his mind arose,
And, as new summers teem'd with brighter views,
He trac'd the wand'rings of his darling Muse,
And all was joy—this instant all is pain,
The foe implacable returns again,
And claims a sacrifice; the deed is done—
Another child has fall'n, another son!
His young cheek even now is scarcely cold,
And shall his early doom remain untold?
No! let the tide of passion roll along,
Truth will be heard, and God will bless the song.
Indignant Reason, Pity, Joy, arise,
And speak in thunder to the heart that sighs.
Speak loud to parents;—knew ye not the time
When age itself, and manhood's hardy prime,
With horror saw their short-liv'd friendships end,
Yet dar'd not visit e'en the dying friend?
Contagion, a foul serpent lurking near,
Mock'd Nature's sigh and Friendship's holy tear.
Love ye your children?—let that love arise,
Pronounce the sentence, and the serpent dies;
Bid welcome a mild stranger at your door,
Distress shall cease, those terrors reign no more.
Love ye your neighbours?—let that love be shown;
Risk not their children while you guard your own;
Give not a foe dominion o'er your blood,
Plant not a poison, e'en to bring forth good;
For, woo the pest discreetly as you will,
Deadly infection must attend him still.
Then, let the serpent die! this glorious prize
Sets more than life and health before our eyes,
For beauty triumphs too! Beauty! sweet name,

The mother's feelings kindling into flame!
For, where dwells she, who, while the virtues grow,
With cold indifference marks the arching brow?
Or, with a lifeless heart and recreant blood,
Sighs not for daughters fair as well as good?
That sigh is nature, and cannot decay,
'Tis universal as the beams of day;
Man knows and feels its truth; for, Beauty's call
Rouses the coldest mortal of us all;
A glance warms age itself, and gives the boy
The pulse of rapture, and the sigh of joy.
And is it then no conquest to insure
Our lilies spotless and our roses pure?
Is it no triumph that the lovely face
Inherits every line of Nature's grace?
That the sweet precincts of the laughing eye
Dread no rude scars, no foul deformity?
Our boast, old Time himself shall not impair,
Of British maids pre-eminently fair;
But, as he rolls his years on years along,
Shall keep the record of immortal song;
For song shall rise with ampler power to speak
The new-born influence of Beauty's cheek,
Shall catch new fires in every sacred grove,
Fresh inspiration from the lips of Love,
And write for ever on the rising mind—
Dead is one mortal foe of human kind!
Yes, we have conquer'd! and the thought should raise
A spirit in our prayers as well as praise,
For who will say, in Nature's wide domain
There lurk not remedies for every pain;
Who will assert, where Turkish banners fly,
Woe still shall reign—the plague shall never die?
Or who predict, with bosom all unblest,
An everlasting fever in the West?
Forbid it, Heav'n!—Hope cheers us with a smile,
The sun of Mercy's risen on our isle:
Its beams already, o'er th' Atlantic wave,
Pierce the dark forests of the suffering brave:
There, e'en th' abandon'd sick imbib'd a glow,

When warrior nations, resting on the bow,
Astonish'd heard the joyful rumour rise,
And call'd the council of their great and wise:
The truth by female pray'rs was urg'd along,
Youth ceas'd the chorus of the warrior song,
And present ills bade present feelings press
With all the eloquence of deep distress;
Till forth their chiefs o'er dying thousands trod
To seek the white man and his bounteous God:
Well sped their errand; with a patriot zeal
They spread the blessing for their country's weal.
Where India's swarthy millions crowd the strand,
And round that isle, which crowns their pointed land,
Speeds the good angel with the balmy breath,
And checks the dreadful tyranny of death:
Whate'er we hear to hurt the peace of life,
Of Candian treachery and British strife,
The sword of commerce, nations bought and sold,
They owe to England more than mines of gold;
England has sent a balm for private woe;
England strikes down the nation's bitterest foe.
Europe, amidst the clangor of her arms,
While life was threaten'd with a thousand harms,
And Charity was freezing to its source,
Still saw fair Science keep her steady course;
And, while whole legions fell, by friends deplor'd,
New germs of life sprung up beneath the sword,
And spread amain.—Then, in our bosoms, why
Must exultation mingle with a sigh?
Thought takes the retrospect of years just fled,
And, conjuring up the spirits of the dead,
Whispers each dear and venerated name
Of the last victims ere the blessing came,
Worthies, who through the lands that gave them birth
Breath'd the strong evidence of growing worth;
Parents, cut down in life's meridian day,
And childhood's thousand thousand swept away;
Life's luckless mariners! ye, we deplore
Who sunk within a boat's length of the shore.
A stranger youth, from his meridian sky,

Buoyant with hopes, came here—but came to die!
O'er his sad fate I've ponder'd hours away,
It suits the languor of a gloomy day:
He left his bamboo groves, his pleasant shore,
He left his friends to hear new oceans roar,
All confident, ingenuous, and bold,
He heard the wonders by the white men told;
With firm assurance trod the rolling deck,
And saw his isle diminish to a speck,
Plough'd the rough waves, and gain'd our northern clime,
In manhood's ripening sense and nature's prime.
Oh! had the fiend been vanquish'd ere he came,
The gen'rous youth had spread my country's fame,
Had known that honour dwells among the brave,
And England had not prov'd the stranger's grave:
Then, ere his waning sand of life had run,
Poor Abba Thule might have seen his son!
    Rise, exultation! spirit, louder speak!
Pity, dislodge thy dew-drops from my cheek:
Sleep sound, forefathers; sleep, brave stranger boy,
While truth impels the current of my joy:
To all mankind, to all the earth 'tis giv'n,
Conviction travels like the light of heav'n:
Go, blessing, from thy birth-place still expand,
For that dear birth-place is my native land!
A nation consecrates th'auspicious day,
And wealth, and rank, and talents lead the way!
Time, with triumphant hand, shall truth diffuse,
Nor ask the unbought efforts of the Muse.
Mothers! the pledges of your loves caress,
And heave no sighs but sighs of tenderness.
Fathers, be firm! keep down the fallen foe,
And on the mem'ry of domestic woe
Build resolution.—Victory shall increase
Th' incalculable wealth of private peace;
And such a victory, unstain'd with gore,
That strews its laurels at the cottage door,
Sprung from the farm, and from the yellow mead,
Should be the glory of the pastoral reed.
In village paths, hence, may we never find

Their youth on crutches, and their children blind;
Nor, when the milk-maid, early from her bed,
Beneath the may-bush that embow'rs her head,
Sings like a bird, e'er grieve to meet again
The fair cheek injur'd by the scars of pain;
Pure, in her morning path, where'er she treads,
Like April sunshine and the flow'rs it feeds,
She'll boast new conquests; Love, new shafts to fling
And Life, an uncontaminated spring.
In pure delight didst thou, my soul, pursue
A task to conscience and to kindred due,
And, true to feeling and to Nature, deem
The dairy's boast thine own appropriate theme;
Hail now the meed of pleasurable hours,
And, at the foot of Science, strew thy flow'rs!

SONG, SUNG BY MR. BLOOMFIELD

At the Anniversary of Doctor Jenner's Birth-Day, 1803

Come hither, mild Beauty, that dwell'st on the mountain,
Sweet handmaid of Liberty, meet us to-day;
Thy votaries philanthropy ask from thy fountain,
A soul-cheering nectar wherewith to be gay.

The cup may o'erflow, and new grapes still be growing;
The eyes of the drinkers resplendently shine;
But grant us, bright nymph, with thy gifts overflowing,
To lighten our hearts, and to relish our wine.

Is Beauty's gay rosebud a prize worth ensuring?
Its guardianship rests with the friends of our cause.
Shall we mark unconcern'd, what the blind are enduring?
No! mercy and peace are the first of our laws.

Wave, streamers of victory; be bravery requited;
Be sails, in all climes, still with honour unfurl'd;
All lovers of man with our cause are delighted;
'Tis to banish the fears, and the tears of the world.

All nations shall feel, and all nations inherit
The wonderful blessing we place in their view;
And if in that blessing a mortal claims merit,
Oh! Jenner—your country resigns it to you!

From the field, from the farm, comes the glorious treasure,
May its life-saving impulse—all fresh as the morn—
Still spread round the earth without bounds, without measure,
Till Time has forgot, when his Jenner was born.

TO HIS WIFE (1804)

I rise, dear Mary, from the soundest rest,
A wandering, way-worn, musing, singing guest.
I claim the privilege of hill and plain;
Mine are the woods, and all that they contain;
The unpolluted gale, which sweeps the glade;
All the cool blessings of the solemn shade;
Health, and the flow of happiness sincere;
Yet there's one wish,—I wish that thou wert here;
Free from the trammels of domestic care,
With me these dear autumnal sweets to share;
To share my heart's ungovernable joy;
And keep the birth-day of our poor lame boy.
Ah! that's a tender string! Yet since I find
That scenes like these, can soothe the harass'd mind,
Trust me, 'twould set thy jaded spirits free,
To wander thus through vales and woods with me.
Thou know'st how much I love to steal away
From noise, from uproar, and the blaze of day;
With double transport would my heart rebound
To lead thee, where the clustering nuts are found;
No toilsome efforts would our task demand,
For the brown treasure stoops to meet the hand.
Round the tall hazel, beds of moss appear
In green-swards nibbled by the forest deer,
Sun, and alternate shade; while o'er our heads
The cawing rook his glossy pinions spreads;
The noisy jay, his wild-woods dashing through;
The ring-dove's chorus, and the rustling bough;
The far resounding gate; the kite's shrill scream;
The distant ploughman's halloo to his team.
This is the chorus to my soul so dear;
It would delight thee too, wert thou but here:
For we might talk of home, and muse o'er days
Of sad distress, and Heaven's mysterious ways;
Our chequer'd fortunes, with a smile retrace,
And build new hopes upon our infant race;
Pour our thanksgivings forth, and weep the while;
Or pray for blessings on our native isle.

But vain the wish!—Mary, thy sighs forbear,
Nor grudge the pleasure which thou canst not share;
Make home delightful, kindly wish for me,
And I'll leave hills, and dales, and woods for thee.

Whittlebury Forest, Sept. 16, 1804.

TO A SPINDLE (c. 1805)

The portrait of my mother was taken on her last visit to London, in the summer of 1804, and about six months previous to her dissolution. During the period of evident decline in her strength and faculties, she conceived, in place of that patient resignation which she had before felt, an ungovernable dread of ultimate want; and observed to a relative, with peculiar emphasis, that 'to meet Winter, Old Age, and Poverty, was like meeting three giants.'

To the last hour of her life she was an excellent spinner; and latterly, the peculiar kind of wool she spun, was brought exclusively for her, as being the only one in the village, who exercised their industry on so fine a sort. During the tearful paroxysms of her last depression, she spun with the utmost violence, and with vehemence exclaimed, 'I must spin!' A paralytic affection, struck her whole right side, while at work, and obliged her to quit her spindle when only half filled, and she died within a fortnight afterwards. I have that spindle now.

She was buried on the last day of the year 1804. She returned from her visit to London, on Friday, the 29th of June, just to a day, 23 years after she brought me to London, which was also on a Friday, in the year 1781.

Relic! I will not bow to thee, nor worship!
Yet, treasure as thou art, remembrancer
Of sunny days, that ever haunt my dreams,
Where thy brown fellows as a task I twirl'd,
And sang my ditties, ere the farm received
My vagrant foot, and with its liberty,
And all its cheerful buds, and op'ning flowers,
Had taught my heart to wander:
—Relic of affection! come;—
Thou shalt a moral teach to me and mine;
The hand that wore thee smooth is cold, and spins
No more! Debility press'd hard, around
The seat of life, and terrors fill'd her brain,—
Nor causeless terrors. Giants grim and bold,
Three mighty ones she fear'd to meet:—they came—
Winter, Old Age, and Poverty,—all came;
The last had dropp'd his club, yet fancy made
Him formidable; and when Death beheld
Her tribulation, he fulfill'd his task,
And to her trembling hand and heart at once,

Cried, 'Spin no more.'—Thou then wert left half fill'd
With this soft downy fleece, such as she wound
Through all her days, she who could spin so well.
Half fill'd wert thou—half finish'd when she died!
—Half finish'd? 'Tis the motto of the world:
We spin vain threads, and strive, and die
With sillier things than spindles on our hands!

Then feeling, as I do, resistlessly,
The bias set upon my soul for verse;
Oh, should old age still find my brain at work,
And Death, o'er some poor fragment striding, cry
'Hold! spin no more!' grant, Heaven, that purity
Of thought and texture, may assimilate
That fragment unto thee, in usefulness,
In worth, and snowy innocence. Then shall
The village school-mistress, shine brighter through
The exit of her boy; and both shall live,
And virtue triumph too; and virtue's tears,
Like Heaven's pure blessings, fall upon their grave.

FROM WILD FLOWERS; OR, PASTORAL AND LOCAL POETRY (1806)

DEDICATION

TO MY ELDEST SON

My dear Boy,

In thus addressing myself to you, and in expressing my regard for your person, my anxiety for your health, and my devotion to your welfare, I enjoy an advantage over those dedicators who indulge in adulation;—I shall at least be believed.

Should you arrive at that period when reason shall be mature, and affection or curiosity induce you to look back on your father's poetical progress through life, you may conclude that he had many to boast as friends, whose names, in a dedication would have honoured both him and his children; but you must also reflect, that to particularize such friends was a point of peculiar delicacy. The earliest patron of my unprotected strains has the warm thanks which are his due, for the introduction of blessings which have been diffused through our whole family; and nothing will ever change this sentiment. But amidst a general feeling of gratitude, which those who know me will never dispute, I feel for you, Charles, what none but parents can conceive; and on your account, my dear boy, there can be no harm in telling the world that I hope these 'Wild Flowers' will be productive of sweets of the worldly kind; for your unfortunate lameness (should it never be removed) may preclude you from the means of procuring comforts and advantages which might otherwise have fallen to your share.

What a lasting, what an unspeakable satisfaction would it be to know that the Ballads, the Ploughman Stories, and the 'Broken Crutch' of your father would eventually contribute to lighten your steps to manhood, and make your own crutch, through life, rather a memorial of affection, than an object of sorrow.

With a parent's feelings, and a parent's cares and hopes,

I am, Charles, yours,

R.B.

FROM THE PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

A Man of the first eminence, in whose day (fortunately perhaps for me) I was not destined to appear before the public, or to abide the Herculean crab-tree of his criticism, Dr. Johnson, has said, in his preface to Shakspeare, that—'Nothing can please many, and please long, but just representations of general nature.' My representations of nature, whatever may be said of their justness, are not general, unless we admit, what I suspect to be the case, that nature in a village is very much like nature every where else. It will be observed that all my pictures are from humble life, and most of my heroines servant maids. Such I would have them: being fully persuaded that, in no other way would my endeavours, either to please or to instruct, have an equal chance of success.

The path I have thus taken, from necessity, as well as from choice, is well understood and approved by hundreds, who are capable of ranging in the higher walks of literature.—But with due deference to their superior claim, I confess, that no recompense has been half so grateful or half so agreeable to me as female approbation. To be readily and generally understood, to have my simple Tales almost instinctively relished by those who have so decided an influence over the lives, hearts, and manners of us all, is the utmost stretch of my ambition.

I here venture, before the public eye, a selection from the various pieces which have been the source of much pleasure, and the solace of my leisure hours during the last four years, and since the publication of the 'Rural Tales.' Perhaps, in some of them, more of mirth is intermingled than many who know me would expect, or than the severe will be inclined to approve. But surely what I can say, or can be expected to say, on subjects of country life, would gain little by the seriousness of a preacher, or by exhibiting fallacious representations of what has long been termed Rural Innocence...

I anticipate some approbation from such readers as have been pleased with the 'Rural Tales;' yet, though I will not falsify my own feelings by assuming a diffidence which I do not conceive to be either manly or becoming, the conviction that some reputation is hazarded in 'a third attempt,' is impressed deeply on my mind.

With such sentiments, and with a lively sense of the high honour, and a hope of the bright recompence, of applause from the good, when heightened by the self-approving voice of my own conscience, I commit the book to its fate.

Robert Bloomfield

TO MY OLD OAK TABLE

Friend of my peaceful days! substantial friend,
Whom wealth can never change, nor int'rest bend,
I love thee like a child. Thou wert to me
The dumb companion of my misery,
And oftner of my joys;—then as I spoke,
I shar'd thy sympathy, Old Heart of Oak!
For surely when my labour ceas'd at night,
With trembling, feverish hands, and aching sight,
The draught that cheer'd me and subdu'd my care,
On thy broad shoulders thou wert proud to bear.
O'er thee, with expectation's fire elate,
I've sat and ponder'd on my future fate:
On thee, with winter muffins for thy store,
I've lean'd, and quite forgot that I was poor.
    Where dropp'd the acorn that gave birth to thee?
Can'st thou trace back thy line of ancestry?
We're match'd, old friend, and let us not repine,
Darkness o'erhangs thy origin and mine;
Both may be truly honourable: yet,
We'll date our honours from the day we met;
When, of my worldly wealth the parent stock,
Right welcome up the Thames from Woolwich Dock
Thou cam'st, when hopes ran high, and love was young;
But soon our olive-branches round thee sprung;
Soon came the days that tried a faithful wife,
The noise of children, and the cares of life.
Then, midst the threat'nings of a wintry sky,
That cough which blights the bud of infancy,
The dread of parents, Rest's inveterate foe,
Came like a plague, and turn'd my songs to woe.
    Rest! without thee what strength can long survive,
What spirit keep the flame of Hope alive?
The midnight murmur of the cradle gave
Sounds of despair; and chilly as the grave

We felt its undulating blast arise,
Midst whisper'd sorrows and ten thousand sighs.
Expiring embers warn'd us each to sleep,
By turns to watch alone, by turns to weep,
By turns to hear, and keep from starting wild,
The sad, faint wailings of a dying child.
But Death, obedient to Heav'n's high command,
Withdrew his jav'lin, and unclench'd his hand;
The little sufferers triumph'd over pain,
Their mother smil'd, and bade me hope again.
Yet Care gain'd ground, Exertion triumph'd less,
Thick fell the gathering terrors of Distress;
Anxiety, and Griefs without a name,
Had made their dreadful inroads on my frame;
The creeping Dropsy, cold as cold could be,
Unnerv'd my arm, and bow'd my head to thee.
Thou to thy trust, old friend, hast not been true;
These eyes the bitterest tears they ever knew
Let fall upon thee; now all wip'd away;
But what from memory shall wipe out that day?
The great, the wealthy of my native land,
To whom a guinea is a grain of sand,
I thought upon them, for my thoughts were free,
But all unknown were then my woes and me.
    Still, Resignation was my dearest friend,
And Reason pointed to a glorious end;
With anxious sighs, a parent's hopes and pride,
I wish'd to live—I trust I could have died!
But winter's clouds pursu'd their stormy way,
And March brought sunshine with the length'ning day,
And bade my heart arise, that morn and night
Now throbb'd with irresistible delight.
Delightful 'twas to leave disease behind,
And feel the renovation of the mind!
To lead abroad, upborne on Pleasure's wing,
Our children, midst the glories of the spring;
Our fellow-sufferers, our only wealth,
To gather daisies in the breeze of health!
    'Twas then, too, when our prospects grew so fair,
And Sabbath bells announc'd the morning pray'r;

Beneath that vast gigantic dome we bow'd,
That lifts its flaming cross above the cloud;
Had gain'd the centre of the chequer'd floor;—
That instant, with reverberating roar
Burst forth the pealing organ—mute we stood;—
The strong sensation boiling through my blood,
Rose in a storm of joy, allied to pain,
I wept, and worshipp'd God, and wept again;
And felt, amidst the fervor of my praise,
The sweet assurances of better days.
    In that gay season, honest friend of mine,
I marked the brilliant sun upon thee shine;
Imagination took her flights so free,
Home was delicious with my book and thee,
The purchas'd nosegay, or brown ears of corn,
Were thy gay plumes upon a summer's morn,
Awakening memory, that disdains control,
They spoke the darling language of my soul:
They whisper'd tales of joy, of peace, of truth,
And conjur'd back the sunshine of my youth:
Fancy presided at the joyful birth,
I pour'd the torrent of my feelings forth;
Conscious of truth in Nature's humble track,
And wrote 'The Farmer's Boy' upon thy back!
Enough, old friend:—thou'rt mine; and shalt partake,
While I have pen to write, or tongue to speak,
Whatever fortune deals me.—Part with thee!
No, not till death shall set my spirit free;
For know, should plenty crown my life's decline,
A most important duty may be thine:
Then, guard me from Temptation's base control,
From apathy and littleness of soul.
The sight of thy old frame, so rough, so rude,
Shall twitch the sleeve of nodding Gratitude;
Shall teach me but to venerate the more
Honest Oak Tables and their guests—the poor;
Teach me unjust distinctions to deride,
And falsehoods gender'd in the brain of Pride;
Shall give to Fancy still the cheerful hour,
To Intellect, its freedom and its power;

To Hospitality's enchanting ring
A charm, which nothing but thyself can bring.
The man who would not look with honest pride
On the tight bark that stemm'd the roaring tide,
And bore him, when he bow'd the trembling knee,
Home, through the mighty perils of the sea,
I love him not.—He ne'er shall be my guest;
Nor sip my cup, nor witness how I'm blest;
Nor lean, to bring my honest friend to shame,
A sacrilegious elbow on thy frame;
But thou through life a monitor shalt prove,
Sacred to Truth, to Poetry, and Love.

Dec. 1803.

THE HORKEY. A PROVINCIAL BALLAD

Advertisement

In the descriptive ballad which follows, it will be evident that I have endeavoured to preserve the style of a gossip, and to transmit the memorial of a custom, the extent or antiquity of which I am not acquainted with, and pretend not to inquire.

In Suffolk husbandry the man who, (whether by merit or by sufferance I know not) goes foremost through the harvest with the scythe or the sickle, is honoured with the title of 'Lord,' and at the Horkey, or harvest-home feast, collects what he can, for himself and brethren, from the farmers and visitors, to make a 'frolic' afterwards, called 'the largess spending.' By way of returning thanks, though perhaps formerly of much more, or of different signification, they immediately leave the seat of festivity, and with a very long and repeated shout of a 'largess' (the number of shouts being regulated by the sums given) seem to wish to make themselves heard by the people of the surrounding farms. And before they rejoin the company within, the pranks and the jollity I have endeavoured to describe, usually take place. These customs, I believe, are going fast out of use; which is one great reason for my trying to tell the rising race of mankind that such were the customs when I was a boy.

I have annexed a glossary of such words as may be found by general readers to require explanation: And will add a short extract from Sir Thomas Brown, of Norwich, M. D. who was born three years before Milton, and outlived him eight years 'It were not impossible to make an original reduction of many words of no general reception in England, but of common use in Norfolk, or peculiar to the East-Angle counties; as Bawnd, Bunny, Thurck, Enemis, Matchly, Sammodithee, Mawther, Kedge, Seele, Straft, Clever, Dere, Nicked, Stingy, Noneare, Feft, Thepes, Gosgood, Kamp, Sibrit, Fangast, Sap, Cothish, Thokish, Bide-owe, Paxwax. Of these, and some others, of no easy originals, when time will permit, the resolution shall be attempted; which to effect, the Danish language, new, and more ancient, may prove of good advantage: which nation remained here fifty years upon agreement, and have left many families in it; and the language of these parts had surely been more commixed and perplex, if the fleet of Hugo de Bones had not been cast away, wherein threescore thousand souldiers, out of Britany and Flanders, were to be wafted over, and were, by King John's appointment, to have a settled habitation in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk.'—Tract the viii. on Languages, particularly the Saxon Folio 1686, p. 48.

I.

What gossips prattled in the sun,
Who talk'd him fairly down,
Up, Memory! tell; 'tis Suffolk fun,
And lingo of their own.

II.

Ah! Judie Twitchet! though thou'rt dead,
With thee the tale begins;
For still seems thrumming in my head
The rattling of thy pins.

III.

Thou Queen of knitters! for a ball
Of worsted was thy pride;
With dangling stockings great and small,
And world of clack beside!

IV.

'We did so laugh; the moon shone bright;
More fun you never knew;
'Twas Farmer Cheerum's Horkey night,
And I, and Grace, and Sue—

V.

But bring a stool, sit round about,
And boys, be quiet, pray;
And let me tell my story out;
'Twas sitch a merry day!

VI.

The butcher whistled at the door,
And brought a load of meat;
Boys rubb'd their hands, and cried, "there's more,"
Dogs wagg'd their tails to see't.

VII.

On went the boilers till the hake
Had much ado to bear 'em;
The magpie talk'd for talking sake,
Birds sung;—but who could hear 'em?

VIII.

Creak went the jack; the cats were scar'd,
We had not time to heed 'em,
The owd hins cackled in the yard,
For we forgot to feed 'em!

IX.

Yet 'twas not I, as I may say,
Because as how, d'ye see,
I only help'd there for the day;
They cou'dn't lay't to me.

X.

Now Mrs. Cheerum's best lace cap
Was mounted on her head;
Guests at the door began to rap,
And now the cloth was spread.

XI.

Then clatter went the earthen plates—
"Mind, Judie," was the cry;
I could have cop't them at their pates;
"Trenchers for me," said I,

XII.

That look so clean upon the ledge,
All proof against a fall;
They never turn a sharp knife's edge,
But fashion rules us all.

XIII.

Home came the jovial Horkey load,
Last of the whole year's crop;
And Grace amongst the green boughs rode
Right plump upon the top.

XIV.

This way and that the waggon reel'd,
And never queen rode higher;
Her cheeks were colour'd in the fields,
And ours before the fire.

XV.

The laughing harvest-folks, and John,
Came in and look'd askew;
'Twas my red face that set them on,
And then they leer'd at Sue.

XVI.

And Farmer Cheerum went, good man,
And broach'd the Horkey beer;
And sitch a mort of folks began
To eat up our good cheer.

XVII.

Says he, "Thank God for what's before us;
That thus we meet agen;"
The mingling voices, like a chorus,
Join'd cheerfully, "Amen."—

XVIII.

Welcome and plenty, there they found 'em,
The ribs of beef grew light;
And puddings—till the boys got round 'em,
And then they vanish'd quite.

XIX.

Now all the guests, with Farmer Crouder,
Began to prate of corn;
And we found out they talk'd the louder,
The oftner pass'd the Horn.

XX.

Out came the nuts; we set a cracking;
The ale came round our way;
By gom, we women fell a clacking
As loud again as they.

XXI.

John sung "Old Benbow" loud and strong,
And I, "The Constant Swain,"
"Cheer up, my Lads," was Simon's song,
"We'll conquer them again."

XXII.

Now twelve o'clock was drawing nigh,
And all in merry cue;
I knock'd the cask, "O, ho!" said I,
"We've almost conquer'd you."

XXIII.

My Lord begg'd round, and held his hat,
Says Farmer Gruff, says he,
"There's many a Lord, Sam, I know that,
Has begg'd as well as thee."

XXIV.

Bump in his hat the shillings tumbled
All round among the folks;
"Laugh if you wool," said Sam, and mumbled,
"You pay for all your jokes."

XXV.

Joint stock you know among the men,
To drink at their own charges;
So up they got full drive, and then
Went out to halloo largess.

XXVI.

And sure enough the noise they made!!—
—But let me mind my tale:
We follow'd them, we worn't afraid,
We'ad all been drinking ale.

XXVII.

As they stood hallooing back to back,
We, lightly as a feather,
Went sideling round, and in a crack
Had pinn'd their coats together.

XXVIII.

'Twas near upon't as light as noon;
'A largess', on the hill,
They shouted to the full round moon,
I think I hear 'em still!

XXIX.

But when they found the trick, my stars!
They well knew who to blame,
Our giggles turn'd to loud ha, ha's,
And arter us they came.

XXX.

The hindmost was the dairy-maid,
And Sam came blundering by;
She could not shun him, so they said;
I know she did not try.

XXXI.

And off set John, with all his might,
To chase me down the yard,
Till I was nearly gran'd outright;
He hugg'd so woundy hard.

XXXII.

Still they kept up the race and laugh,
And round the house we flew;
But hark ye! the best fun by half
Was Simon arter Sue.

XXXIII.

She car'd not, dark nor light, not she,
So, near the dairy door
She pass'd a clean white hog, you see,
They'd kilt the day before.

XXXIV.

High on the spirket there it hung,—
"Now, Susie—what can save ye?"
Round the cold pig his arms he flung,
And cried, "Ah! here I have ye!"

XXXV.

The farmers heard what Simon said,
And what a noise! good lack!
Some almost laugh'd themselves to dead
And others clapt his back.

XXXVI.

We all at once began to tell
What fun we had abroad;
But Simon stood our jeers right well;
—He fell asleep and snor'd.

XXXVII.

Then in his button-hole upright,
Did Farmer Crouder put
A slip of paper, twisted tight,
And held the candle to't.

XXXVIII.

It smok'd, and smok'd, beneath his nose,
The harmless blaze crept higher;
Till with a vengeance up he rose,
Fire, Judie, Sue! fire, fire!

XXXIX.

The clock struck one—some talk'd of parting,
Some said it was a sin,
And hitch'd their chairs;—but those for starting Now let the moonlight in.

XL.

Owd women, loitering for the nonce,
Stood praising the fine weather;
The menfolks took the hint at once
To kiss them altogether.

XLI.

And out ran every soul beside,
A shanny-pated crew;
Owd folks could neither run nor hide,
So some ketch'd one, some tew.

XLII.

They skriggl'd and began to scold,
But laughing got the master;
Some quack'ling cried, "let go your hold;"
The farmers held the faster.

XLIII.

All innocent, that I'll be sworn,
There worn't a bit of sorrow,
And women, if their gowns are torn,
Can mend them on the morrow.

XLIV.

Our shadows helter skelter danc'd
About the moonlight ground;
The wondering sheep, as on we pranc'd,
Got up and gaz'd around.

XLV.

And well they might—till Farmer Cheerum,
Now with a hearty glee,
Bade all good morn as he came near 'em,
And then to bed went he.

XLVI.

Then off we stroll'd this way and that,
With merry voices ringing;
And Echo answered us right pat,
As home we rambl'd singing.

XLVII.

For, when we laugh'd, it laugh'd again,
And to our own doors follow'd!
"Yo, ho!" we cried; "Yo, ho!" so plain,
The misty meadow halloo'd.

XLVIII.

That's all my tale, and all the fun,
Come, turn your wheels about;
My worsted, see!—that's nicely done,
Just held my story out!!'

XLIX.

Poor Judie!—Thus Time knits or spins
The worsted from Life's ball!
Death stopt thy tales, and stopt thy pins,
—And so he'll serve us all.

THE BROKEN CRUTCH. A TALE

'I tell you, Peggy,' said a voice behind
A hawthorn hedge, with wild briars thick entwin'd,
Where unseen trav'llers down a shady way
Journey'd beside the swaths of new-mown hay,
'I tell you, Peggy, 'tis a time to prove
Your fortitude, your virtue, and your love.
From honest poverty our lineage sprung,
Your mother was a servant quite as young;—
You weep; perhaps she wept at leaving home;
Courage, my girl, nor fear the days to come.
Go still to church, my Peggy, plainly drest,
And keep a living conscience in your breast;
Look to yourself, my lass, the maid's best fame,
Beware, nor bring the Meldrums into shame:
Be modest, to the voice of truth attend,
Be honest, and you'll always find a friend:
Your uncle Gilbert, stronger far than I,
Will see you safe; on him you must rely:
I've walk'd too far; this lameness, oh! the pain;
Heav'n bless thee, child! I'll halt me back again;
But when your first fair holiday may be,
Do, dearest Peggy, spend your hours with me.'
    Young Herbert Brooks, in strength and manhood bold,
Who, round the meads, his own possessions, stroll'd,
O'erheard the charge, and with a heart so gay,
Whistled his spaniel, and pursu'd his way.
Soon cross'd his path, and short obeisance paid,
Stout Gilbert Meldrum and a country maid;
A box upon his shoulder held full well
Her worldly riches, but the truth to tell
She bore the chief herself; that nobler part,
That beauteous gem, an uncorrupted heart.
And then that native loveliness! that cheek!
It bore the very tints her betters seek.
At such a sight the libertine would glow
With all the warmth that he can never know;
Would send his thoughts abroad without control,
The glimmering moonshine of his little soul.

'Above the reach of justice I shall soar,
Her friends may rail, not punish; they're too poor:
That very thought the rapture will enhance,
Poor, young, and friendless; what a glorious chance!
A few spare guineas may the conquest make,—
I love the treachery for treachery's sake,—
And when her wounded honour jealous grows,
I'll cut away ten thousand oaths and vows,
And bravely boast, all snarling fools defying,
How I, a girl out-witted,—just by lying.'
Such was not Herbert—he had never known
Love's genuine smiles, nor suffer'd from his frown;
And as to that most honourable part
Of planting daggers in a parent's heart,
A novice quite:—he past his hours away,
Free as a bird, and buxom as the day;
Yet, should a lovely girl by chance arise,
Think not that Herbert Brooks would shut his eyes.
    On thy calm joys with what delight I dream,
Thou dear green valley of my native stream!
Fancy o'er thee still waves th'enchanting wand,
And every nook of thine is fairy land,
And ever will be, though the axe should smite
In Gain's rude service, and in Pity's spite,
Thy clustering alders, and at length invade
The last, last poplars, that compose thy shade:
Thy stream shall still in native freedom stray,
And undermine the willows in its way,
These, nearly worthless, may survive this storm,
This scythe of desolation call'd 'Reform.'
No army past that way! yet are they fled,
The boughs that, when a school-boy, screen'd my head:
I hate the murderous axe; estranging more
The winding vale from what it was of yore,
Than e'en mortality in all its rage,
And all the change of faces in an age.
'Warmth,' will they term it, that I speak so free;
They strip thy shades,—thy shades so dear to me!
In Herbert's days woods cloth'd both hill and dale;
But peace, Remembrance! let us tell the tale.

His home was in the valley, elms grew round
His moated mansion, and the pleasant sound
Of woodland birds that loud at day-break sing,
With the first cuckoos that proclaim the spring,
Flock'd round his dwelling; and his kitchen smoke,
That from the towering rookery upward broke,
Of joyful import to the poor hard by,
Stream'd a glad sign of hospitality;
So fancy pictures; but its day is o'er;
The moat remains; the dwelling is no more!
Its name denotes its melancholy fall,
For village children call the spot 'Burnt-Hall.'
But where's the maid, who in the meadow-way
Met Herbert Brooks amongst the new-mown hay?
Th'adventure charm'd him, and next morning rose
The Sabbath, with its silence and repose;
The bells ceas'd chiming, and the broad blue sky
Smil'd on his peace, and met his tranquil eye
Inverted, from the foot-bridge on his way
To that still house where all his fathers lay;
There in his seat, each neighbour's face he knew—
The stranger girl was just before his pew!
He saw her kneel, with meek, but cheerful air,
And whisper the response to every prayer;
And, when the humble roof with praises rung,
He caught the Hallelujah from her tongue,
Rememb'ring with delight the tears that fell
When the poor father bade his child farewell;
And now, by kindling tenderness beguil'd,
He blest the prompt obedience of that child,
And link'd his fate with hers:—for, from that day,
Whether the weeks past cheerily away,
Or deep revolving doubts procur'd him pain,
The same bells chim'd—and there she was again!
What could be done? they came not there to woo,
On holy ground,—though love is holy too.
They met upon the foot-bridge one clear morn,
She in the garb by village lasses worn;
He, with unbutton'd frock that careless flew,
And buskin'd to resist the morning dew;

With downcast look she courtsied to the ground,
Just in his path—no room to sidle round.
'Well, pretty girl, this early rising yields
The best enjoyment of the groves and fields.
And makes the heart susceptible and meek,
And keeps alive that rose upon your cheek.
I long'd to meet you, Peggy, though so shy,
I've watch'd your steps, and learn'd your history;
You love your poor lame father, let that be
A happy presage of your love for me.
Come then, I'll stroll these meadows by your side,
I've seen enough to wish you for my bride,
And I must tell you so.—Nay, let me hold
This guiltless hand, I prize it more than gold;
Of that I have my share, but fain would prove
The sterling wealth of honourable love;
My lands are fruitful, and my flocks increase,
My house knows plenty, and my servants peace;
One blessing more will crown my happy life,
Like Adam, pretty girl, I want a wife.'
Need it be told his suit was not denied,
With youth, and wealth, and candour on his side?
Honour took charge of love so well begun,
And accidental meetings, one by one,
Increas'd so fast midst time's unheeded flight,
That village rumour married them outright;
Though wiser matrons, doubtful in debate,
Pitied deluded Peggy's hapless fate.
Friends took th'alarm, 'And will he then disgrace
The name of Brooks with this plebeian race?'
Others, more lax in virtue, not in pride,
Sported the wink of cunning on one side;
'He'll buy, no doubt, what Peggy has to sell,
A little gallantry becomes him well.'
Meanwhile the youth, with self-determin'd aim,
Disdaining fraud, and pride's unfeeling claim,
Above control, pursued his generous way,
And talk'd to Peggy of the marriage-day.
Poor girl! she heard, with anguish and with doubt,
What her too-knowing neighbours preach'd about,

That Herbert would some nobler match prefer,
And surely never, never marry her;
Yet, with what trembling and delight she bore
The kiss, and heard the vow, 'I'll doubt no more;
Protect me, Herbert, for your honour's sake
You will,' she cried, 'nor leave my heart to break.'
Then wrote to uncle Gilbert, joys, and fears,
And hope, and trust, and sprinkled all with tears.
    Rous'd was the dormant spirit of the brave,
E'en lameness rose to succour and to save;
For, though they both rever'd young Herbert's name,
And knew his unexceptionable fame;
And though the girl had honestly declar'd
Love's first approaches, and their counsel shar'd,
Yet, that he truly meant to take for life
The poor and lowly Peggy for a wife;
Or, that she was not doom'd to be deceiv'd,
Was out of bounds:—it could not be believ'd.
'Go, Gilbert, save her; I, you know, am lame;
Go, brother, go, and save my child from shame.
Haste, and I'll pray for your success the while,
Go, go;' then bang'd his crutch upon the stile:—
It snapt.—E'en Gilbert trembled while he smote,
Then whipt the broken end beneath his coat;
'Aye, aye, I'll settle them; I'll let them see
Who's to be conqu'ror this time, I or he!'
    Then off he set, and with enormous strides,
Rebellious mutterings and oaths besides,
O'er cloverfield and fallow, bank and briar,
Pursu'd the nearest cut, and fann'd the fire
That burnt within him.—Soon the Hall he spied,
And the grey willows by the water side;
Nature cried 'halt!' nor could he well refuse;
Stop, Gilbert, breathe awhile, and ask the news.
'News?' cried a stooping grandame of the vale,
'Aye, rare news too; I'll tell you such a tale;
But let me rest; this bank is dry and warm;
Do you know Peggy Meldrum at the farm?
Young Herbert's girl? He'as cloth'd her all in white,
You never saw so beautiful a sight!

Ah! he's a fine young man, and such a face!
I knew his grandfather and all his race;
He rode a tall white horse, and look'd so big,
But how shall I describe his hat and wig?'
'Plague take his wig,' cried Gilbert, 'and his hat,
Where's Peggy Meldrum? can you tell me that?'
'Aye; but have patience, man! you'll hear anon,
For I shall come to her as I go on,
So hark'ye friend; his grandfather I say,'—
'Poh, poh,'—cried Gilbert, as he turn'd away.
Her eyes were fix'd, her story at a stand,
The snuff-box lay half open'd in her hand;
'You great, ill-manner'd clown! but I must bear it;
You oaf; to ask the news, and then won't hear it!'
But Gilbert had gain'd forty paces clear,
When the reproof came murmuring on his ear.
Again he ask'd the first that pass'd him by;
A cow-boy stopt his whistle to reply.
'Why, I've a mistress coming home, that's all,
They're playing Meg's diversion at the Hall;
For master's gone, with Peggy, and his cousin,
And all the lady-folks, about a dozen,
To church, down there; he'll marry one no doubt,
For that it seems is what they're gone about;
I know it by their laughing and their jokes,
Tho' they wor'nt ask'd at church like other folks.'
Gilbert kept on, and at the Hall-door found
The winking servants, where the jest went round:
All expectation; aye, and so was he,
But not with heart so merry and so free.
The kitchen table, never clear from beef,
Where hunger found its solace and relief,
Free to all strangers, had no charms for him,
For agitation worried every limb;
Ale he partook, but appetite had none,
And grey-hounds watch'd in vain to catch the bone.
All sounds alarm'd him, and all thoughts perplex'd,
With dogs, and beef, himself, and all things vex'd,
Till with one mingled caw above his head,
Their gliding shadows o'er the court-yard spread,

The rooks by thousands rose: the bells struck up;
He guess'd the cause, and down he set the cup,
And listening, heard, amidst the general hum,
A joyful exclamation, 'Here they come!'—
Soon Herbert's cheerful voice was heard above,
Amidst the rustling hand-maids of his love,
And Gilbert follow'd without thought or dread,
The broad oak stair-case thunder'd with his tread;
Light tript the party, gay as gay could be,
Amidst their bridal dresses—there came he!
And with a look that guilt could ne'er withstand,
Approach'd his niece and caught her by the hand,
'Now are you married, Peggy, yes or no?
Tell me at once, before I let you go!'
Abrupt he spoke, and gave her arm a swing,
But the same moment felt the wedding ring,
And stood confus'd.—She wip'd th'empassion'd tear,
'I am, I am; but is my father here?'
Herbert stood by, and sharing with his bride,
That perturbation which she strove to hide;
'Come, honest Gilbert, you're too rough this time,
Indeed here's not the shadow of a crime;
But where's your brother? When did you arrive?
We waited long, for Nathan went at five!'
    All this was Greek to Gilbert, downright Greek;
He knew not what to think, nor how to speak.
The case was this; that Nathan with a cart
To fetch them both at day-break was to start.
And so he did—but ere he could proceed,
He suck'd a charming portion with a reed,
Of that same wedding-ale, which was that day
To make the hearts of all the village gay;
Brim full of glee he trundled from the Hall,
And as for sky-larks, he out-sung them all;
Till growing giddy with his morning cup,
He, stretch'd beneath a hedge, the reins gave up;
The horse graz'd soberly without mishap,
And Nathan had a most delightful nap
For three good hours—Then, doubting, when he woke,
Whether his conduct would be deem'd a joke,

With double haste perform'd just half his part,
And brought the lame John Meldrum in his cart.
And at the moment Gilbert's wrath was high,
And while young Herbert waited his reply,
The sound of rattling wheels was at the door;
'There's my dear father now,'—they heard no more,
The bridegroom glided like an arrow down,
And Gilbert ran, though something of a clown,
With his best step; and cheer'd with smiles and pray'rs,
They bore old John in triumph up the stairs:
Poor Peggy, who her joy no more could check,
Clung like a dewy woodbine round his neck.
And all stood silent—Gilbert, off his guard,
And marvelling at virtue's rich reward,
Loos'd the one loop that held his coat before,
Down thumpt the broken crutch upon the floor!
They started, half alarm'd, scarce knowing why,
But through the glist'ning rapture of his eye
The bridegroom smil'd, then chid their simple fears,
And rous'd the blushing Peggy from her tears;
Around the uncle in a ring they came,
And mark'd his look of mingled pride and shame.
'Now honestly, good Gilbert, tell us true,
What meant this cudgel? What was it to do?
I know your heart suspected me of wrong,
And that most true affection urg'd along
Your feelings and your wrath; you were beside
Till now the rightful guardian of the bride.
But why this cudgel?'—'Guardian! that's the case,
Or else to-day I had not seen this place,
But John about the girl was so perplex'd,
And I, to tell the truth, so mortal vex'd,
That when he broke this crutch, and stampt and cried,
For John and Peggy, Sir, I could have died,
Aye, that I could; for she was such a child,
So tractable, so sensible, so mild,
That if between you roguery had grown
(Begging your pardon,) 'twould have been your own;
She would not hurt a fly.—So off I came,
And had I found you injuring her fame,

And base enough to act as hundreds would,
To ruin a poor maid—because you could,
With this same cudgel, (you may smile or frown)
An' please you, Sir, I meant to knock you down.'
A burst of laughter rang throughout the Hall,
And Peggy's tongue, though overborne by all,
Pour'd its warm blessings; for, without control
The sweet unbridled transport of her soul
Was obviously seen, till Herbert's kiss
Stole, as it were, the eloquence of bliss.
'Welcome, my friends; good Gilbert, here's my hand;
Eat, drink, or rest, they're all at your command:
And whatsoever pranks the rest may play,
You still shall be the hero of the day,
Doubts might torment, and blunders may have teaz'd,
Let my ale cure them; let us all be pleas'd.
And as for honest John, let me defend
The father of my new, my bosom friend;
You broke your crutch, well, well, worse luck might be,
I'll be your crutch, John Meldrum, lean on me,
And when your lovely daughter shall complain,
Send Gilbert's wooden argument again.
You still may wonder that I take a wife
From the secluded walks of humble life,
On reason's solid ground my love began,
And let the wise confute it if they can.
A girl I saw, with nature's untaught grace,
Turn from my gaze a most engaging face;
I saw her drop the tear, I knew full well
She felt for you much more than she could tell.
I found her understanding, bright as day,
Through all impediments still forc'd its way;
On that foundation shall my hopes rely,
The rock of genuine humility.
Call'd as she is to act a nobler part,
To rule my household, and to share my heart,
I trust her prudence, confident to prove
Days of delight, and still unfading love;
And, while her inborn tenderness survives,
That heav'nly charm of mothers and of wives,

I'll look for joy:—But see, the neighbours all
Come posting on to share the festival;
And I'm determin'd, while the sun's so bright,
That this shall be a wedding-day outright:
How cheerly sound the bells! my charmer, come,
Partake their joy, and know yourself at home.
Sit down, good John;'—'I will,' the old man cried,
'And let me drink to you, Sir, and the bride;
My blessing on you: I am lame and old,
I can't make speeches, and I wo'n't be bold;
But from my soul I wish and wish again,
That brave good gentlemen would not disdain
The poor, because they're poor: for, if they live
Midst crimes that parents never can forgive,
If, like the forest beast, they wander wild,
To rob a father, or to crush a child,
Nature will speak, aye, just as Nature feels,
And wish—a Gilbert Meldrum at their heels.'

SHOOTER'S HILL

Sickness may be often an incentive to poetical composition; I found it so; and I esteem the following lines only because they remind me of past feelings, which I would not willingly forget.

I.

Health! I seek thee;—dost thou love
The mountain-top or quiet vale,
Or deign o'er humbler hills to rove
On showery June's dark south-west gale?
If so, I'll meet all blasts that blow,
With silent step, but not forlorn;
Though, goddess, at thy shrine I bow,
And woo thee each returning morn.

II.

I seek thee where, with all his might,
The joyous bird his rapture tells,
Amidst the half-excluded light,
That gilds the fox-glove's pendant bells;
Where cheerly up the bold hill's side
The deep'ning groves triumphant climb;
In groves Delight and Peace abide,
And Wisdom marks the lapse of time.

III.

To hide me from the public eye,
To keep the throne of Reason clear,
Amidst fresh air to breathe or die,
I took my staff and wander'd here:
Suppressing every sigh that heaves,
And coveting no wealth but thee,
I nestle in the honied leaves,
And hug my stolen liberty.

IV.

O'er eastward uplands, gay or rude,
    Along to Erith's ivied spire,
I start, with strength and hope renew'd,
    And cherish life's rekindling fire.
Now measure vales with straining eyes,
    Now trace the church-yard's humble names;
Or, climb brown heaths, abrupt that rise,
    And overlook the winding Thames.

V.

I love to mark the flow'ret's eye,
    To rest where pebbles form my bed,
Where shapes and colours scatter'd lie,
    In varying millions round my head.
The soul rejoices when alone,
    And feels her glorious empire free;
Sees God in every shining stone,
    And revels in variety.

VI.

Ah me! perhaps within my sight,
    Deep in the smiling dales below,
Gigantic talents, Heav'n's pure light,
    And all the rays of genius glow
In some lone soul, whom no one sees
    With power and will to say 'Arise,'
Or chase away the slow disease,
    And Want's foul picture from his eyes.

VII.

A worthier man by far than I,
    With more of industry and fire,
Shall see fair Virtue's meed pass by,
    Without one spark of fame expire!
Bleed not my heart, it will be so,
    The throb of care was thine full long;
Rise, like the Psalmist from his woe,
    And pour abroad the joyful song.

VIII.

Sweet Health, I seek thee! hither bring
Thy balm that softens human ills;
Come, on the long drawn clouds that fling
Their shadows o'er the Surry-Hills.
Yon green-topt hills, and far away
Where late as now I freedom stole,
And spent one dear delicious day
On thy wild banks, romantic Mole.

IX.

Aye, there's the scene! beyond the sweep
Of London's congregated cloud,
The dark-brow'd wood, the headlong steep,
And valley-paths without a crowd!
Here, Thames, I watch thy flowing tides,
Thy thousand sails am proud to see;
But where the Mole all silent glides
Dwells Peace—and Peace is wealth to me!

X.

Of Cambrian mountains still I dream,
And mouldering vestiges of war;
By time-worn cliff or classic stream
Would rove,—but Prudence holds a bar.
Come then, O Health! I'll strive to bound
My wishes to this airy stand;
'Tis not for me to trace around
The wonders of my native land.

XI.

Yet, the loud torrent's dark retreat,
Yet Grampian hills shall Fancy give,
And, towering in her giddy seat,
Amidst her own creation live,
Live, if thou'lt urge my climbing feet,
Give strength of nerve and vigorous breath,
If not, with dauntless soul I meet
The deep solemnity of death.

XII.

This far-seen monumental tower
Records th'achievements of the brave,
And Angria's subjugated power,
Who plunder'd on the eastern wave.
I would not that such turrets rise
To point out where my bones are laid;
Save that some wandering bard might prize
The comfort of its broad cool shade.

XIII.

O Vanity! since thou'rt decreed
Companion of our lives to be,
I'll seek the moral songster's meed,
An earthly immortality;
Most vain!—O let me, from the past
Remembering what to man is given,
Lay Virtue's broad foundations fast,
Whose glorious turrets reach to Heav'n.

BARNHAM WATER

On a sultry afternoon, late in the summer of 1802, Euston-Hall lay in my way to Thetford, which place I did not reach until the evening, on a visit to my sister: the lines lose much of their interest except they could be read on the spot, or at least at a corresponding season of the year.

I.

Fresh from the Hall of Bounty sprung,
With glowing heart and ardent eye,
With song and rhyme upon my tongue,
And fairy visions dancing by,
The mid-day sun in all his pow'r
The backward valley painted gay;
Mine was a road without a flower,
Where one small streamlet cross'd the way.

II.

What was it rous'd my soul to love?
What made the simple brook so dear?
It glided like the weary dove,
And never brook seem'd half so clear.
Cool pass'd the current o'er my feet,
Its shelving brink for rest was made,
But every charm was incomplete,
For Barnham Water wants a shade.

III.

There, faint beneath the fervid sun,
I gaz'd in ruminating mood;
For who can see the current run
And snatch no feast of mental food?
'Keep pure thy soul,' it seem'd to say,
'Keep that fair path by wisdom trod,
That thou may'st hope to wind thy way,
To fame worth boasting, and to God.'

IV.

Long and delightful was the dream,
    A waking dream that Fancy yields,
Till with regret I left the stream,
    And plung'd across the barren fields;
To where of old rich abbeys smil'd
    In all the pomp of gothic taste,
By fond tradition proudly styl'd
    The mighty 'City in the East.'

V.

Near, on a slope of burning sand,
    The shepherd boys had met to play,
To hold the plains at their command,
    And mark the trav'ller's leafless way.
The trav'ller with a cheerful look
    Would every pining thought forbear,
If boughs but shelter'd Barnham brook
    He'd stop and leave his blessing there.

VI.

The Danish mounds of partial green,
    Still, as each mouldering tower decays,
Far o'er the bleak unwooded scene
    Proclaim their wond'rous length of days.
My burning feet, my aching sight,
    Demanded rest—why did I weep?
The moon arose, and such a night!
    Good Heav'n! it was a sin to sleep.

VII.

All rushing came thy hallow'd sighs,
    Sweet Melancholy, from my breast;
''Tis here that eastern greatness lies,
    That Might, Renown, and Wisdom rest!
Here funeral rites the priesthood gave
    To chiefs who sway'd prodigious powers,
The Bigods and the Mowbrays brave,
    From Framlingham's imperial towers.'

VIII.

Full of the mighty deeds of yore,
    I bade good night the trembling beam;
Fancy e'en heard the battle's roar,
    Of what but slaughter could I dream?
Bless'd be that night, that trembling beam,
    Peaceful excursions Fancy made;
All night I heard the bubbling stream,
    Yet, Barnham Water wants a shade.

IX.

Whatever hurts my country's fame,
    When wits and mountaineers deride,
To me grows serious, for I name
    My native plains and streams with pride.
No mountain charms have I to sing,
    No loftier minstrel's rights invade;
From trifles oft my raptures spring;
    —Sweet Barnham Water wants a shade.

FROM THE BANKS OF WYE (1811)

Preface

In the summer of l807, a party of my good friends in Gloucestershire, proposed to themselves a short excursion down the Wye, and through part of South Wales.

While this plan was in agitation, the lines which I had composed on 'Shooter's Hill,' during ill health, and inserted in my last volume, obtained their particular attention. A spirit of prediction, as well as sorrow, is there indulged; and it was now in the power of this happy party to falsify such predictions, and to render a pleasure to the writer of no common kind. An invitation to accompany them was the consequence; and the following Journal is the result of that invitation.

Should the reader, from being a resident, or frequent visitor, be well acquainted with the route, and able to discover inaccuracies in distances, succession of objects, or local particulars, he is requested to recollect, that the party was out but ten days; a period much too short for correct and laborious description, but quite sufficient for all the powers of poetry which I feel capable of exerting. The whole exhibits the language and feelings of a man who had never before seen a mountainous country; and of this it is highly necessary that the reader should be apprized.

A Swiss, or perhaps a Scottish Highlander, may smile at supposed or real exaggerations; but they will be excellent critics, when they call to mind that they themselves judge, in these cases, as I do, by comparison.

Perhaps it may be said, that because much of public approbation has fallen to my lot, it was unwise to venture again. I confess that the journey left such powerful, such unconquerable impressions on my mind, that embodying my thoughts in rhyme became a matter almost of necessity. To the parties concerned I know it will be an acceptable little volume: to whom, and to the public, it is submitted with due respect.

Robert Bloomfield. City Road, London, June 30, 1811

Advertisement to the Second Edition (1813)

When this Poem, or Journal, was submitted to the Public, I endeavoured to meet that confined and temporary approbation, which its locality induced me to expect. It is, therefore, with no small pleasure that I have, thus, in a Second Edition, the power of correcting, and I hope amending, this favourite of my fancy, this gem of my memory, which flashes upon me still like the sunshine of Spring.

I have seen no regular critique on the piece, strange as it may appear, (for I have left London,) and consequently, in the present instance, have not the advantage of public criticism.

The Lady whose name appears in the Dedication is no more; she was a wife and a mother, in their truest sense. And, it is sufficient for me to say, that she possessed the character which distinguishes her uncle, the venerable Granville Sharp.

In my own family, I have sustained the loss of my second daughter, in her twentieth year; yet, while Providence grants me peace of mind, I enjoy repose, and am, the Reader's Obedient, R.B.

Shefford, Beds, April 7, 1813.

BOOK III

CONTENTS OF BOOK III

Departure for Ragland.—Ragland Castle.—Abergavenny.—Expedition up the 'Pen-y-Vale,' or Sugar-Loaf Hill.—Invocation to the Spirit of Burns.—View from the Mountain.—Castle of Abergavenny.—Departure for Brecon.—Pembrokes of Crickhowel.—Tre-Tower Castle.—Jane Edwards.

Peace to your white-wall'd cots, ye vales,
Untainted fly your summer gales;
Health, thou from cities lov'st to roam,
O make the Monmouth hills thy home!
Great spirits of her bards of yore,
While harvests triumph, torrents roar,
Train her young shepherds, train them high
To sing of mountain liberty:
Give them the harp and modest maid;
Give them the sacred village shade.
Long be Llandenny, and Llansoy,
Names that import a rural joy;

Known to our fathers, when May-day
Brush'd a whole twelvemonth's care away.
    Far diff'rent joys possess'd the mind,
When Chepstow fading sunk behind,
And, from a belt of woods full grown,
Arose immense thy turrets brown,
Majestic Ragland! Harvests wave
Where thund'ring hosts their watch-word gave,
When cavaliers, with downcast eye,
Struck the last flag of loyalty:
Then, left by gallant Worc'ster's band,
To devastation's cruel hand
The beauteous fabric bow'd, fled all
The splendid hours of festival.
No smoke ascends; the busy hum
Is heard no more; no rolling drum,
No high-ton'd clarion sounds alarms,
No banner wakes the pride of arms;
But ivy, creeping year by year,
Of growth enormous, triumphs here.
Each dark festoon with pride upheaves
Its glossy wilderness of leaves
On sturdy limbs, that, clasping, bow
Broad o'er the turrets' utmost brow,
Encompassing, by strength alone,
In fret-work bars, the sliding stone,
That tells how years and storms prevail,
And spreads its dust upon the gale.
    The man who could unmov'd survey
What ruin, piecemeal, sweeps away;
Works of the pow'rful and the brave,
All sleeping in the silent grave;
Unmov'd reflect, that here were sung
Carols of joy, by beauty's tongue,
Is fit, where'er he deigns to roam,
And hardly fit—to stay at home.
Spent here in peace,—one solemn hour
('Midst legends of the Yellow Tower,
Truth and tradition's mingled stream,
Fear's start, and superstition's dream)

Is pregnant with a thousand joys,
That distance, place, nor time destroys;
That with exhaustless stores supply
Food for reflection till we die.
    Onward the rested steeds pursu'd
The cheerful route, with strength renew'd,
For onward lay the gallant town,
Whose name old custom hath clipp'd down,
With more of music left than many,
So handily to Abergany.
And as the sidelong, sober light
Left valleys darken'd, hills less bright,
Great Blorenge rose to tell his tale;
And the dun peak of Pen-y-Vale
Stood like a sentinel, whose brow
Scowl'd on the sleeping world below;
Yet even sleep itself outspread
The mountain paths we meant to tread,
'Midst fresh'ning gales all unconfin'd,
Where Usk's broad valley shrinks behind.
    Joyous the crimson morning rose,
As joyous from the night's repose
Sprung the light heart. The glancing eye
Beheld, amidst the dappl'd sky,
Exulting Pen-y-Vale. But how
Could females climb his gleaming brow,
Rude toil encount'ring? how defy
The wint'ry torrent's course, when dry,
A rough-scoop'd bed of stones? or meet
The powerful force of August heat?
Wheels might assist, could wheels be found
Adapted to the rugged ground:
'Twas done; for prudence bade us start
With three Welch ponies, and a cart;
A red-cheek'd mountaineer, a wit,
Full of rough shafts, that sometimes hit,
Trudg'd by their side, and twirl'd his thong,
And cheer'd his scrambling team along.
    At ease to mark a scene so fair,
And treat their steeds with mountain air,

Some rode apart, or led before,
Rock after rock the wheels upbore;
The careful driver slowly sped,
To many a bough we duck'd the head,
And heard the wild inviting calls
Of summer's tinkling waterfalls,
In wooded glens below; and still,
At every step the sister hill,
Blorenge, grew greater; half unseen
At times from out our bowers of green,
That telescopic landscapes made,
From the arch'd windows of its shade;
For woodland tracts begirt us round;
The vale beyond was fairy ground,
That verse can never paint. Above
Gleam'd, (something like the mount of Jove,
But how much, let the learned say,
Who take Olympus in their way)
Gleam'd the fair, sunny, cloudless peak
That simple strangers ever seek.
And are they simple? Hang the dunce
Who would not doff his cap at once
In extasy, when, bold and new,
Bursts on his sight a mountain-view.
    Though vast the prospect here became,
Intensely as the love of fame
Glow'd the strong hope, that strange desire,
That deathless wish of climbing higher,
Where heather clothes his graceful sides,
Which many a scatter'd rock divides,
Bleach'd by more years than hist'ry knows,
Mov'd by no power but melting snows,
Or gushing springs, that wash away
Th'embedded earth that forms their stay.
The heart distends, the whole frame feels,
Where, inaccessible to wheels,
The utmost storm-worn summit spreads
Its rocks grotesque, its downy beds;
Here no false feeling, sense belies,
Man lifts the weary foot, and sighs;

Laughter is dumb; hilarity
Forsakes at once th'astonish'd eye;
E'en the clos'd lip, half useless grown,
Drops but a word, 'Look down; look down.'
    Good Heav'ns! must scenes like these expand,
Scenes so magnificently grand,
And millions breathe, and pass away,
Unbless'd throughout their little day,
With one short glimpse? By place confin'd,
Shall many an anxious, ardent mind,
Sworn to the Muses, cow'r its pride,
Doom'd but to sing with pinions tied?
    Spirit of Burns! the daring child
Of glorious freedom, rough and wild,
How have I wept o'er all thy ills,
How blest thy Caledonian hills!
How almost worshipp'd in my dreams
Thy mountain haunts,—thy classic streams!
How burnt with hopeless, aimless fire,
To mark thy giant strength aspire
In patriot themes! and tun'd the while
Thy 'Bonny Doon' or 'Balloch Mile.'
Spirit of Burns! accept the tear
That rapture gives thy mem'ry here
On the bleak mountain top. Here thou
Thyself hadst rais'd the gallant brow
Of conscious intellect, to twine
Th'imperishable verse of thine,
That charms the world. Or can it be,
That scenes like these were nought to thee?
That Scottish hills so far excel,
That so deep sinks the Scottish dell,
That boasted Pen-y-Vale had been
For thy loud northern lyre too mean;
Broad-shoulder'd Blorenge a mere knoll,
And Skyrid, let him smile or scowl,
A dwarfish bully, vainly proud,
Because he breaks the passing cloud?
If even so, thou bard of fame,
The consequences rest the same:

For, grant that to thy infant sight
Rose mountains of stupendous height;
Or grant that Cambrian minstrels taught
'Mid scenes that mock the lowland thought;
Grant that old Talliesen flung
His thousand raptures, as he sung
From huge Plynlimon's awful brow,
Or Cader Idris, capt with snow;
Such Alpine scenes with them or thee
Well suited.—These are Alps to me.
    Long did we, noble Blorenge, gaze
On thee, and mark the eddying haze
That strove to reach thy level crown,
From the rich stream, and smoking town;
And oft, old Skyrid, hail'd thy name,
Nor dar'd deride thy holy fame.
Long follow'd with untiring eye
Th'illumin'd clouds, that o'er the sky
Drew their thin veil, and slowly sped,
Dipping to every mountain's head,
Dark mingling, fading, wild, and thence,
Till admiration, in suspense,
Hung on the verge of sight. Then sprung,
By thousands known, by thousands sung,
Feelings that earth and time defy,
That cleave to immortality.
    A light gray haze inclos'd us round:
Some momentary drops were found,
Borne on the breeze; soon all dispell'd;
Once more the glorious prospect swell'd
Interminably fair. Again
Stretch'd the Black Mountain's dreary chain!
When eastward turn'd the straining eye,
Great Malvern met the cloudless sky:
Dark in the south uprose the shores,
Where Ocean in his fury roars,
And rolls abrupt his fearful tides,
Far still from Mendip's fern-clad sides;
From whose vast range of mingling blue
The weary, wand'ring sight withdrew,

O'er fair Glamorgan's woods and downs,
O'er glitt'ring streams, and farms, and towns,
Back to the Table Rock, that lowers
O'er old Crickhowel's ruin'd towers.
    Here perfect stillness reign'd. The breath
A moment hush'd, 'twas mimic death.
The ear, from all assaults releas'd,
As motion, sound, and life, had ceas'd.
The beetle rarely murmur'd by,
No sheep-dog sent his voice so high,
Save when, by chance, far down the steep,
Crept a live speck, a straggling sheep;
Yet one lone object, plainly seen,
Curv'd slowly, in a line of green,
On the brown heath: no demon fell,
No wizard foe, with magic spell,
To chain the senses, chill the heart,
No wizard guided Powel's cart;
He of our nectar had the care,
All our ambrosia rested there.
At leisure, but reluctant still,
We join'd him by a mountain rill;
And there, on springing turf, all seated,
Jove's guests were never half so treated;
Journeys they had, and feastings many,
But never came to Abergany;
Lucky escape:—the wrangling crew,
Mischief to cherish or to brew,
Was all their sport; and when, in rage,
They chose 'midst warriors to engage,
Loud for their fiery steeds they cried,
And dash'd th'opposing clouds aside,
Whirl'd through the air, and foremost stood
'Midst mortal passions, mortal blood!
Beneath us frown'd no deadly war,
And Powel's wheels were safer far;
As on them, without flame or shield,
Or bow to twang, or lance to wield,
We left the heights of inspiration,
And relish'd a mere mortal station;

Our object, not to fire a town,
Or aid a chief, or knock him down;
But safe to sleep, from war and sorrow,
And drive to Brecknock on the morrow.
    Heavy and low'ring, crouds on crouds,
Drove adverse hosts of dark'ning clouds
Low o'er the vale, and far away,
Deep gloom o'erspread the rising day;
No morning beauties caught the eye,
O'er mountain top, or stream, or sky,
As round the castle's ruin'd tower,
We mus'd for many a solemn hour;
And, half-dejected, half in spleen,
Computed idly, o'er the scene,
How many murders there had dy'd
Chiefs and their minions, slaves of pride;
When perjury, in every breath,
Pluck'd the huge falchion from its sheath,
And prompted deeds of ghastly fame,
That hist'ry's self might blush to name.
    At length, through each retreating shower,
Burst, with a renovating power,
Light, life, and gladness; instant fled
All contemplations on the dead.
    Who hath not mark'd, with inward joy,
The efforts of the diving boy;
And, waiting while he disappear'd,
Exulted, trembled, hop'd, and fear'd?
Then felt his heart, 'midst cheering cries,
Bound with delight to see him rise?
Who hath not burnt with rage, to see
Falsehood's vile cant, and supple knee;
Then hail'd, on some courageous brow,
The power that works her overthrow;
That, swift as lightning, seals her doom,
'Hence, miscreant! vanish!—truth is come?'
So Pen-y-Vale upheav'd his brow,
And left the world of fog below;
So Skyrid, smiling, broke his way
To glories of the conqu'ring day;

With matchless grace, and giant pride,
So Blorenge turn'd the clouds aside,
And warn'd us, not a whit too soon,
To chase the flying car of noon,
Where herds and flocks unnumber'd fed,
Where Usk her wand'ring mazes led.
    Here on the mind, with powerful sway,
Press'd the bright joys of yesterday;
For still, though doom'd no more t'inhale
The mountain air of Pen-y-Vale,
His broad dark-skirting woods o'erhung
Cottage and farm, where careless sung
The labourer, where the gazing steer
Low'd to the mountains, deep and clear.
    Slow less'ning Blorenge, left behind,
Reluctantly his claims resign'd,
And stretch'd his glowing front entire,
As forward peep'd Crickhowel spire;
But no proud castle's turrets gleam'd;
No warrior Earl's gay banner stream'd.
E'en of thy palace; (grief to tell!)
A tower—without a dinner bell;
An arch—where jav'lin'd sentries bow'd
Low to their chief, or fed the croud,
Are all that mark where once a train
Of Barons grac'd thy rich domain,
Illustrious Pembroke! drain'd thy bowl,
And caught the nobleness of soul—
The harp-inspir'd, indignant blood
That prompts to arms and hardihood.
    To muse upon the days gone by,
Where desolation meets the eye,
Is double life; truth, cheaply bought,
The nurse of sense, the food of thought,
Whence judgment, ripen'd, forms, at will,
Her estimates of good or ill;
And brings contrasted scenes to view,
And weighs the old rogues with the new;
Imperious tyrants, gone to dust,
With tyrants whom the world hath curs'd

Through modern ages.—By what power
Rose the strong walls of old Tre Tower
Deep in the valley; whose clear rill
Then stole through wilds, and wanders still
Through village shades, unstain'd with gore
Where war-steeds bathe their hoofs no more?
    Empires have fallen, armies bled,
Since yon old wall, with upright head,
Met the loud tempest; who can trace
When first the rude mass, from its base,
Stoop'd in that dreadful form? E'en thou,
Jane, with the placid silver brow,
Know'st not the day, though thou hast seen
An hundred springs of cheerful green,
An hundred winters' snows increase
That brook,—the emblem of thy peace.
Most venerable dame! and shall
The plund'rer, in his gorgeous hall,
His fame with Moloch-frown prefer,
And scorn thy harmless character,
Who scarcely hear'st of his renown,
And never sack'd or burnt a town?
But should he crave, with coward cries,
To be Jane Edwards when he dies,
Thou'lt be the Conqueror, old lass,
So take thy alms, and let us pass.
    Forth, from the calm sequester'd shade,
Once more approaching twilight, bade;
When, as the sigh of joy arose,
And while e'en fancy sought repose,
One vast transcendant object sprung,
Arresting every eye and tongue.
Strangers, (fair Brecon,) wondering, scan
The peaks of thy stupendous Vann:
But how can strangers, chain'd by time,
Through floating clouds his summit climb?
Another day had almost fled;
A clear horizon, glowing red,
Its promise on all hearts impress'd,
Bright sunny hours, and Sabbath rest.

SONG (c. 1812)

TUNE.—LIGORAN COSH

The man in the moon look'd down one night,
    Where a lad and his lass were walking;
Thinks he, there must be very huge delight
    In this kissing and nonsense talking:
And so there must ('tis a well-known case),
    For it lasts both late and early.
For they talk'd him down, till he cover'd his face,
    —They tir'd his patience fairly.

Then up rose the sun in his morning beams,
    And push'd back his nightcap to greet them;
Says he,—'as you boast of your darts and flames,
    My darts and my flames shall meet them.'
He scorch'd them both through the live-longday,
    But they never seem'd to mind him,
But laugh'd outright, as he skulk'd away,
    And left a dark world behind him.

Then the man in the moon look'd down in a pet,
    And said, 'I believe I can cure you;
Though my brother has fail'd, I may conquer yet—
    If not, I must try to endure you.
Go home,' he cried, 'and attend to my rules,
    And banish all thoughts of sorrow;
Then jump into bed, you couple of fools,
    And you'll both be wiser to-morrow.'

SONNET (c. 1819)

TO FIFTEEN GNATS SEEN DANCING IN THE SUN-BEAMS ON JAN. 3

Welcome, ye little fools, to cheer us now,
With recollections of a summer's eve;
And, though my heart, can not the cheat believe,
Still merrily dance about your leafless bough.
—I love you from my soul; and though I know
Ye can but die—to think how soon, I grieve;—
Perhaps to-night the blast of death may blow;
Frost be at hand—who grants you no reprieve.
—Your company's too small, I ween, that you
Thus raise the shrill note of your summer's song;
Yet dance away—'tis thus that children do,—
And wiser men to life's end dance along.
Die, little gnats, as winds or frosts ordain:—
Death is our frost too—but we fly again.

HOB'S EPITAPH (c. 1819)

A grey-owl was I when on earth;
    My master, a wondrous wise-man,
Found out my deserts and my worth,
    And would needs have me bred an exciseman.

He gave me the range of his house,
    And a favourite study, his shed,
Where I rush'd on the struggling mouse,
    While science rush'd into my head.

In gauging, I still made advances;
    Like schoolboy, grew wiser and wiser;
Resolved in the world to take chances,
    And try to come in supervisor.

But Fate comes, and Genius must fail:—
    One morning, while gauging or drinking,
My wig over-ballanced my tail,
    And I found myself stifling and sinking.

Yet I died not like men—who still quarrel
    Through life—yet to destiny yield:—
The tippler is drown'd in his barrel;
    The soldier is slain in the field.—

Not in love—nor in debt—nor in strife—
    Nor in horrors attendant on war:—
In a barrel I gave up my life,
    But mine was—a barrel of tar.

MAY-DAY WITH THE MUSES (1822)

PREFACE

I am of opinion that Prefaces are very useless things in cases like the present, where the Author must talk of himself, with little amusement to his readers. I have hesitated whether I should say any thing or nothing; but as it is the fashion to say something, I suppose I must comply. I am well aware that many readers will exclaim—'It is not the common practice of English baronets to remit half a year's rent to their tenants for poetry, or for any thing else.' This may be very true; but I have found a character in the Rambler, No. 82, who made a very different bargain, and who says, 'And as Alfred received the tribute of the Welsh in wolves' heads, I allowed my tenants to pay their rents in butterflies, till I had exhausted the papilionaceous tribe. I then directed them to the pursuit of other animals, and obtained, by this easy method, most of the grubs and insects which land, air, or water can supply ... I have, from my own ground, the longest blade of grass upon record, and once accepted, as a half year`s rent for a field of wheat, an ear, containing more grains than had been seen before upon a single stem.'

I hope my old Sir Ambrose stands in no need of defence from me or from any one; a man has a right to do what he likes with his own estate. The characters I have introduced as candidates may not come off so easily; a cluster of poets is not likely to be found in one village, and the following lines, written by my good friend T. Park,
Esq. of Hampstead, are not only true, but beaufully true, and I cannot omit them.

WRITTEN IN THE ISLE OF THANET,
August, 1790

The bard, who paints from rural plains,
    Must oft himself the void supply
Of damsels pure and artless swains,
    Of innocence and industry:

For sad experience shows the heart
    Of human beings much the same;
Or polish'd by insidious art,
    Or rude as from the clod it came.

And he who roams the village round,
    Or strays amid the harvest sere,
Will hear, as now, too many a sound
    Quiet would never wish to hear.

The wrangling rustics' loud abuse,
    The coarse, unfeeling, witless jest,
The threat obscene, the oath profuse,
    And all that cultured minds detest.

Hence let those Sylvan poets glean,
    Who picture life without a flaw;
Nature may form a perfect scene,
    But Fancy must the figures draw.

The word 'fancy' connects itself with my very childhood, fifty years back. The fancy of those who wrote the songs which I was obliged to hear in infancy was a very inanimate and sleepy fancy. I could enumerate a dozen songs at least which all described sleeping shepherds and shepherdesses, and, in one instance, where they both went to sleep: this is not fair certainly; it is not even 'watch and watch.'

As Damon and Phillis were keeping of sheep,
Being free from all care they retired to sleep, &c.

I must say, that if I understand any thing at all about keeping sheep, this is not the way to go to work with them. But such characters and such writings were fashionable, and fashion will beat common sense at any time.

With all the beauty and spirit of Cunningham's 'Kate of Aberdeen,' and some others, I never found any thing to strike my mind so forcibly as the last stanza of Dibdin's 'Sailor's Journal'—

At length, 'twas in the month of May,
        Our crew, it being lovely weather,
At three A. M. discovered day

And England's chalky cliffs together!
At seven, up channel how we bore,
Whilst hopes and fears rush'd o'er each fancy!
At twelve, I gaily jump'd on shore,
And to my throbbing heart press'd Nancy.

This, to my feelings, is a balm at all times; it is spirit, animation, and imagery, all at once.

I will plead no excuses for any thing which the reader may find in this little volume, but merely state, that I once met with a lady in London, who, though otherwise of strong mind and good information, would maintain that 'it is impossible for a blind man to fall in love.' I always thought her wrong, and the present tale of 'Alfred and Jennet' is written to elucidate my side of the question.

I have been reported to be dead; but I can assure the reader that this, like many other reports, is not true. I have written these tales in anxiety, and in a wretched state of health; and if these formidable foes have not incapacitated me, but left me free to meet the public eye with any degree of credit, that degree of credit I am sure I shall gain.

I am, with remembrance of what is past,
Most respectfully,
Robert Bloomfield

Shefford, Bedfordshire,
April 10th 1822.

THE INVITATION

O for the strength to paint my joy once more!
That joy I feel when Winter's reign is o'er;
When the dark despot lifts his hoary brow,
And seeks his polar-realm's eternal snow.
Though black November's fogs oppress my brain,
Shake every nerve, and struggling fancy chain;
Though time creeps o'er me with his palsied hand,
And frost-like bids the stream of passion stand,
And through his dry teeth sends a shivering blast,
And points to more than fifty winters past,
Why should I droop with heartless, aimless eye?
Friends start around, and all my phantoms fly,
And Hope, upsoaring with expanded wing,
Unfolds a scroll, inscribed 'Remember Spring.'
Stay, sweet enchantress, charmer of my days,
And glance thy rainbow colours o'er my lays;
Be to poor Giles what thou hast ever been,
His heart's warm solace and his sovereign queen;
Dance with his rustics when the laugh runs high,
Live in the lover's heart, the maiden's eye;
Still be propitious when his feet shall stray
Beneath the bursting hawthorn-buds of May;
Warm every thought, and brighten every hour,
And let him feel thy presence and thy power.
    Sir Ambrose Higham, in his eightieth year,
With memory unimpair'd, and conscience clear,
His English heart untrammell'd, and full blown
His senatorial honours and renown,
Now, basking in his plenitude of fame,
Resolved, in concert with his noble dame,
To drive to town no more—no more by night
To meet in crowded courts a blaze of light,
In streets a roaring mob with flags unfurl'd,
And all the senseless discord of the world,—
But calmly wait the hour of his decay,
The broad bright sunset of his glorious day;
And where he first drew breath at last to fall,
Beneath the towering shades of Oakly Hall.

Quick spread the news through hamlet, field, and farm,
The labourer wiped his brow and staid his arm;
'Twas news to him of more importance far
Than change of empires or the yells of war;
It breathed a hope which nothing could destroy,
Poor widows rose, and clapp'd their hands for joy,
Glad voices rang at every cottage door,
'Good old Sir Ambrose goes to town no more.'
Well might the village bells the triumphs sound,
Well might the voice of gladness ring around;
Where sickness raged, or want allied to shame,
Sure as the sun his well-timed succour came;
Food for the starving child, and warmth and wine
For age that totter'd in its last decline.
From him they shared the embers' social glow;
He fed the flame that glanced along the snow,
When winter drove his storms across the sky,
And pierced the bones of shrinking poverty.
Sir Ambrose loved the Muses, and would pay
Due honours even to the ploughman's lay;
Would cheer the feebler bard, and with the strong
Soar to the noblest energies of song;
Catch the rib-shaking laugh, or from his eye
Dash silently the tear of sympathy.
Happy old man!—with feelings such as these
The seasons all can charm, and trifles please;
And hence a sudden thought, a new-born whim,
Would shake his cup of pleasure to the brim,
Turn scoffs and doubts and obstacles aside,
And instant action follow like a tide.
Time past, he had on his paternal ground
With pride the latent sparks of genius found
In many a local ballad, many a tale,
As wild and brief as cowslips in the dale,
Though unrecorded as the gleams of light
That vanish in the quietness of night.
'Why not,' he cried, as from his couch he rose,
'To cheer my age, and sweeten my repose,
Why not be just and generous in time,
And bid my tenants pay their rents in rhyme?

For one half year they shall.—A feast shall bring
A crowd of merry faces in the spring;—
Here, pens, boy, pens; I'll weigh the case no more,
But write the summons:—go, go, shut the door.

"All ye on Oakly manor dwelling,
Farming, labouring, buying, selling,
Neighbours! banish gloomy looks,
My grey old steward shuts his books.
Let not a thought of winter's rent
Destroy one evening's merriment;
I ask not gold, but tribute found
Abundant on Parnassian ground.
Choose, ye who boast the gift, your themes
Of joy or pathos, tales or dreams,
Choose each a theme;—but, harkye, bring
No stupid ghost, no vulgar thing;
Fairies, indeed, may wind their way,
And sparkle through the brightest lay:
I love their pranks, their favourite green,
And, could the little sprites be seen,
Were I a king, I'd sport with them,
And dance beneath my diadem.
But surely fancy need not brood
O'er midnight darkness, crimes, and blood,
In magic cave or monk's retreat,
Whilst the bright world is at her feet;
Whilst to her boundless range is given,
By night, by day, the lights of heaven,
And all they shine upon; whilst Love
Still reigns the monarch of the grove,
And real life before her lies
In all its thousand, thousand dies.
Then bring me nature, bring me sense,
And joy shall be your recompense:
On Old May-day I hope to see
All happy:—leave the rest to me.
A general feast shall cheer us all
Upon the lawn that fronts the hall,
With tents for shelter, laurel boughs

And wreaths of every flower that blows.
The months are wending fast away;
Farewell,—remember Old May-day."'

Surprise, and mirth, and gratitude, and jeers,
The clown's broad wonder, th'enthusiast's tears,
Fresh gleams of comfort on the brow of care,
The sectary's cold shrug, the miser's stare,
Were all excited, for the tidings flew
As quick as scandal the whole country through.
'Rent paid by rhymes at Oakly may be great,
But rhymes for taxes would appal the state,'
Exclaim'd th'exciseman,—'and then tithes, alas!
Why there, again, 'twill never come to pass.'—
Thus all still ventured, as the whim inclined,
Remarks as various as the varying mind:
For here Sir Ambrose sent a challenge forth,
That claim'd a tribute due to sterling worth;
And all, whatever might their host regale,
Agreed to share the feast and drink his ale.
Now shot through many a heart a secret fire,
A new born spirit, an intense desire
For once to catch a spark of local fame,
And bear a poet's honourable name!
Already some aloft began to soar,
And some to think who never thought before;
But O, what numbers all their strength applied,
Then threw despairingly the task aside
With feign'd contempt, and vow'd they'd never tried.
Did dairy-wife neglect to turn her cheese,
Or idling miller lose the favouring breeze;
Did the young ploughman o'er the furrows stand,
Or stalking sower swing an empty hand,
One common sentence on their heads would fall,
'Twas Oakly banquet had bewitch'd them all.
Loud roar'd the winds of March, with whirling snow,
One brightening hour an April breeze would blow;
Now hail, now hoar-frost bent the flow'ret's head,
Now struggling beams their languid influence shed,
That scarce a cowering bird yet dared to sing

'Midst the wild changes of our island spring.
Yet, shall the Italian goatherd boasting cry,
'Poor Albion! when hadst thou so clear a sky!'
And deem that nature smiles for him alone;
Her renovated beauties all his own?
No:—let our April showers by night descend,
Noon's genial warmth with twilight stillness blend;
The broad Atlantic pour her pregnant breath,
And rouse the vegetable world from death;
Our island spring is rapture's self to me,
All I have seen, and all I wish to see.
    Thus came the jovial day, no streaks of red
O'er the broad portal of the morn were spread,
But one high-sailing mist of dazzling white,
A screen of gossamer, a magic light,
Doom'd instantly, by simplest shepherd's ken,
To reign awhile, and be exhaled at ten.
O'er leaves, o'er blossoms, by his power restored,
Forth came the conquering sun and look'd abroad;
Millions of dew-drops fell, yet millions hung,
Like words of transport trembling on the tongue
Too strong for utt'rance:—Thus the infant boy,
With rosebud cheeks, and features tuned to joy,
Weeps while he struggles with restraint or pain,
But change the scene, and make him laugh again,
His heart rekindles, and his cheek appears
A thousand times more lovely through his tears.
From the first glimpse of day a busy scene
Was that high swelling lawn, that destined green,
Which shadowless expanded far and wide,
The mansion's ornament, the hamlet's pride;
To cheer, to order, to direct, contrive,
Even old Sir Ambrose had been up at five;
There his whole household labour'd in his view,—
But light is labour where the task is new.
Some wheel'd the turf to build a grassy throne
Round a huge thorn that spread his boughs alone,
Rough-rined and bold, as master of the place;
Five generations of the Higham race
Had pluck'd his flowers, and still he held his sway,

Waved his white head, and felt the breath of May.
Some from the green-house ranged exotics round,
To bask in open day on English ground:
And 'midst them in a line of splendour drew
Long wreaths and garlands, gather'd in the dew.
Some spread the snowy canvas, propp'd on high
O'er shelter'd tables with their whole supply;
Some swung the biting scythe with merry face,
And cropp'd the daisies for a dancing space.
Some roll'd the mouldy barrel in his might,
From prison'd darkness into cheerful light,
And fenced him round with cans; and others bore
The creaking hamper with its costly store,
Well cork'd, well flavour'd, and well tax'd, that came
From Lusitanian mountains, dear to fame,
Whence Gama steer'd, and led the conquering way
To eastern triumphs and the realms of day.
A thousand minor tasks fill'd every hour,
'Till the sun gain'd the zenith of his power,
When every path was throng'd with old and young,
And many a sky-lark in his strength upsprung
To bid them welcome.—Not a face was there
But for May-day at least had banish'd care;
No cringing looks, no pauper tales to tell,
No timid glance, they knew their host too well,—
Freedom was there, and joy in every eye:
Such scenes were England's boast in days gone by.
Beneath the thorn was good Sir Ambrose found,
His guests an ample crescent form'd around;
Nature's own carpet spread the space between,
Where blithe domestics plied in gold and green.
The venerable chaplain waved his wand,
And silence follow'd as he stretch'd his hand,
And with a trembling voice, and heart sincere,
Implored a blessing on th'abundant cheer.
Down sat the mingling throng, and shared a feast
With hearty welcomes given, by love increased;
A patriarch family, a close-link'd band,
True to their rural chieftain, heart and hand:
The deep carouse can never boast the bliss,

The animation of a scene like this.
    At length the damask cloths were whisk'd away,
Like fluttering sails upon a summer's day;
The hey-day of enjoyment found repose;
The worthy baronet majestic rose;
They view'd him, while his ale was filling round,
The monarch of his own paternal ground.
His cup was full, and where the blossoms bow'd
Over his head, Sir Ambrose spoke aloud,
Nor stopp'd a dainty form or phrase to cull—
His heart elated, like his cup, was full:—
'Full be your hopes, and rich the crops that fall;
Health to my neighbours, happiness to all.'
Dull must that clown be, dull as winter's sleet,
Who would not instantly be on his feet:
An echoing health to mingling shouts gave place,
'Sir Ambrose Higham, and his noble race.'
    Avaunt, Formality! thou bloodless dame,
With dripping besom quenching nature's flame;
Thou cankerworm, who liv'st but to destroy,
And eat the very heart of social joy;—
Thou freezing mist round intellectual mirth,
Thou spell-bound vagabond of spurious birth,
Away! away! and let the sun shine clear,
And all the kindnesses of life appear.
    With mild complacency, and smiling brow,
The host look'd round, and bade the goblets flow;
Yet curiously anxious to behold
Who first would pay in rhymes instead of gold;
Each eye inquiring through the ring was glanced
To see who dared the task, who first advanced;
That instant started Philip from the throng,
Philip, a farmer's son, well known for song,—
And, as the mingling whispers round him ran,
He humbly bow'd, and timidly began:—

THE DRUNKEN FATHER

Poor Ellen married Andrew Hall,
    Who dwells beside the moor,
Where yonder rose-tree shades the wall,
    And woodbines grace the door.

Who does not know how blest, how loved
    Were her mild laughing eyes
By every youth!—but Andrew proved
    Unworthy of his prize.

In tippling was his whole delight,
    Each sign-post barr'd his way;
He spent in muddy ale at night
    The wages of the day.

Though Ellen still had charms, was young,
    And he in manhood's prime,
She sad beside her cradle sung,
    And sigh'd away her time.

One cold bleak night, the stars were hid,
    In vain she wish'd him home;
Her children cried, half cheer'd, half chid,
    'O when will father come!'

'Till Caleb, nine years old, upsprung,
    And kick'd his stool aside,
And younger Mary round him clung,
    'I'll go, and you shall guide.'

The children knew each inch of ground,
    Yet Ellen had her fears;
Light from the lantern glimmer'd round,
    And show'd her falling tears.

'Go by the mill and down the lane;
    Return the same way home:
Perhaps you'll meet him, give him light;
    O how I wish he'd come!'

Away they went, as close and true
    As lovers in the shade,
And Caleb swung his father's staff
    At every step he made.

The noisy mill-clack rattled on,
    They saw the water flow,
And leap in silvery foam along,
    Deep murmuring below.

'We'll soon be there,' the hero said,
    'Come on, 'tis but a mile,—
Here's where the cricket-match was play'd,
    And here's the shady stile.

How the light shines up every bough!
    How strange the leaves appear!
Hark!—What was that?—'tis silent now,
    Come, Mary, never fear.'

The staring oxen breathed aloud,
    But never dream'd of harm;
A meteor glanced along the cloud
    That hung o'er Wood-Hill Farm.

Old Caesar bark'd and howl'd hard by,
    All else was still as death,
But Caleb was ashamed to cry,
    And Mary held her breath.

At length they spied a distant light,
    And heard a chorus brawl;
Wherever drunkards stopp'd at night,
    Why there was Andrew Hall.

The house was full, the landlord gay,
The bar-maid shook her head,
And wish'd the boobies far away
That kept her out of bed.

There Caleb enter'd, firm, but mild,
And spoke in plaintive tone:—
'My mother could not leave the child,
So we are come alone.'

E'en drunken Andrew felt the blow
That innocence can give,
When its resistless accents flow
To bid affection live.

'I'm coming, loves, I'm coming now,'—
Then, shuffling o'er the floor,
Contrived to make his balance true,
And led them from the door.

The plain broad path that brought him there
By day, though faultless then,
Was up and down and narrow grown,
Though wide enough for ten.

The stiles were wretchedly contrived,
The stars were all at play,
And many a ditch had moved itself
Exactly in his way.

But still conceit was uppermost,
That stupid kind of pride:—
'Dost think I cannot see a post?
Dost think I want a guide?

Why, Mary, how you twist and twirl!
Why dost not keep the track?
I'll carry thee home safe, my girl,'—
Then swung her on his back.

Poor Caleb muster'd all his wits
To bear the light ahead,
As Andrew reel'd and stopp'd by fits,
Or ran with thund'ring tread.

Exult, ye brutes, traduc'd and scorn'd,
Though true to nature's plan;
Exult, ye bristled, and ye horn'd,
When infants govern man.

Down to the mill-pool's dangerous brink
The headlong party drove;
The boy alone had power to think,
While Mary scream'd above.

'Stop!' Caleb cried, 'you've lost the path;
The water's close before;
I see it shine, 'tis very deep,—
Why, don't you hear it roar?'

And then in agony exclaim'd,
'O where's my mother now?'
The Solomon of hops and malt
Stopp'd short and made a bow:

His head was loose, his neck disjointed,
It cost him little trouble;
But, to be stopp'd and disappointed,
Poh! danger was a bubble.

Onward he stepp'd, the boy alert,
Calling his courage forth,
Hung like a log on Andrew's skirt,
And down he brought them both.

The tumb'ling lantern reach'd the stream,
Its hissing light soon gone;
'Twas night, without a single gleam,
And terror reign'd alone.

A general scream the miller heard,
    Then rubb'd his eyes and ran,
And soon his welcome light appear'd,
    As grumbling he began:—

'What have we here, and whereabouts?
    Why what a hideous squall!
Some drunken fool! I thought as much—
    'Tis only Andrew Hall!

Poor children!' tenderly he said,
    'But now the danger's past.'
They thank'd him for his light and aid,
    And drew near home at last.

But who upon the misty path
    To meet them forward press'd?
'Twas Ellen, shivering, with a babe
    Close folded to her breast.

Said Andrew, 'Now you're glad, I know,
    To se-se-see us come;—
But I have taken care of both,
    And brought them bo-bo-both safe home.'

With Andrew vex'd, of Mary proud,
    But prouder of her boy,
She kiss'd them both, and sobb'd aloud,—
    The children cried for joy.

But what a home at last they found!
    Of comforts all bereft;
The fire out, the last candle gone,
    And not one penny left!

But Caleb quick as lightning flew,
    And raised a light instead;
And as the kindling brands he blew,
    His father snored in bed.

No brawling, boxing termagant
Was Ellen, though offended;
Who ever knew a fault like this
By violence amended?

No:—she was mild as April morn,
And Andrew loved her too;
She rose at daybreak, though forlorn,
To try what love could do.

And as her waking husband groan'd,
And roll'd his burning head,
She spoke with all the power of truth,
Down kneeling by his bed.

'Dear Andrew, hear me,—though distress'd
Almost too much to speak,—
This infant starves upon my breast—
To scold I am too weak.

I work, I spin, I toil all day,
Then leave my work to cry,
And start with horror when I think
You wish to see me die.

But do you wish it? can that bring
More comfort, or more joy?
Look round the house, how destitute!
Look at your ragged boy!

That boy should make a father proud,
If any feeling can;
Then save your children, save your wife,
Your honour as a man.

Hear me, for God's sake hear me now,
And act a father's part!'
The culprit bless'd her angel tongue,
And clasp'd her to his heart;

And would have vow'd, and would have sworn,
    But Ellen kiss'd him dumb,—
'Exert your mind, vow to yourself,
    And better days will come.

I shall be well when you are kind,
    And you'll be better too.'—
'I'll drink no more,'—he quick rejoin'd,—
    'Be't poison if I do.'

From that bright day his plants, his flowers,
    His crops began to thrive,
And for three years has Andrew been
    The soberest man alive.

———————

Soon as he ended, acclamations 'rose,
Endang'ring modesty and self-repose,
Till the good host his prudent counsel gave,
Then listen'd all, the flippant and the grave.
'Let not applauses vanity inspire,
Deter humility, or damp desire;
Neighbours we are, then let the stream run fair,
And every couplet be as free as air;
Be silent when each speaker claims his right,
Enjoy the day as I enjoy the sight:
They shall not class us with the knavish elves,
Who banish shame, and criticise themselves.'
    Thenceforward converse flow'd with perfect ease,
Midst country wit, and rustic repartees.
One drank to Ellen, if such might be found,
And archly glanced at female faces round.
If one with tilted can began to bawl,
Another cried, 'Remember Andrew Hall.'
Then, multifarious topics, corn and hay,
Vestry intrigues, the rates they had to pay,
The thriving stock, the lands too wet, too dry,
And all that bears on fruitful husbandry,

Ran mingling through the crowd—a crowd that might,
Transferr'd to canvas, give the world delight;
A scene that Wilkie might have touch'd with pride—
The May-day banquet then had never died.
But who is he, uprisen, with eye so keen,
In garb of shining plush of grassy green—
Dogs climbing round him, eager for the start,
With ceaseless tail, and doubly beating heart?
A stranger, who from distant forests came,
The sturdy keeper of the Oakly game.
Short prelude made, he pointed o'er the hill,
And raised a voice that every ear might fill;
His heart was in his theme, and in the forest still.

THE FORESTER

Born in a dark wood's lonely dell,
Where echoes roar'd, and tendrils curl'd
Round a low cot, like hermit's cell,
Old Salcey Forest was my world.
I felt no bonds, no shackles then,
For life in freedom was begun;
I gloried in th'exploits of men,
And learn'd to lift my father's gun.

O what a joy it gave my heart!
Wild as a woodbine up I grew;
Soon in his feats I bore a part,
And counted all the game he slew.
I learn'd the wiles, the shifts, the calls,
The language of each living thing;
I mark'd the hawk that darting falls,
Or station'd spreads the trembling wing.

I mark'd the owl that silent flits,
The hare that feeds at eventide,
The upright rabbit, when he sits
And mocks you, ere he deigns to hide.

I heard the fox bark through the night,
I saw the rooks depart at morn,
I saw the wild deer dancing light,
And heard the hunter's cheering horn.

Mad with delight, I roam'd around
From morn to eve throughout the year,
But still, midst all I sought or found,
My favourites were the spotted deer.
The elegant, the branching brow,
The doe's clean limbs and eyes of love;
The fawn as white as mountain snow,
That glanced through fern and brier and grove.

One dark, autumnal, stormy day,
The gale was up in all its might,
The roaring forest felt its sway,
And clouds were scudding quick as light:
A ruthless crash, a hollow groan,
Aroused each self-preserving start,
The kine in herds, the hare alone,
And shagged colts that grazed apart.

Midst fears instinctive, wonder drew
The boldest forward, gathering strength
As darkness lour'd, and whirlwinds blew,
To where the ruin stretch'd his length.
The shadowing oak, the noblest stem
That graced the forest's ample bound,
Had cast to earth his diadem;
His fractured limbs had delved the ground.

He lay, and still to fancy groan'd;
He lay like Alfred when he died—
Alfred, a king by Heaven enthroned,
His age's wonder, England's pride!
Monarch of forests, great as good,
Wise as the sage,—thou heart of steel!
Thy name shall rouse the patriot's blood
As long as England's sons can feel.

From every lawn, and copse, and glade,
The timid deer in squadrons came,
And circled round their fallen shade
With all of language but its name.
Astonishment and dread withheld
The fawn and doe of tender years,
But soon a triple circle swell'd,
With rattling horns and twinkling ears.

Some in his root's deep cavern housed,
And seem'd to learn, and muse, and teach,
Or on his topmost foliage browsed,
That had for centuries mock'd their reach.
Winds in their wrath these limbs could crash,
This strength, this symmetry could mar;
A people's wrath can monarchs dash
From bigot throne or purple car.

When Fate's dread bolt in Clermont's bowers
Provoked its million tears and sighs,
A nation wept its fallen flowers,
Its blighted hopes, its darling prize.—
So mourn'd my antler'd friends awhile,
So dark, so dread, the fateful day;
So mourn'd the herd that knew no guile,
Then turn'd disconsolate away!

Who then of language will be proud?
Who arrogate that gift of heaven?
To wild herds when they bellow loud,
To all the forest-tribes 'tis given.
I've heard a note from dale or hill
That lifted every head and eye;
I've heard a scream aloft, so shrill
That terror seized on all that fly.

Empires may fall, and nations groan,
Pride be thrown down, and power decay;
Dark bigotry may rear her throne,
But science is the light of day.

Yet, while so low my lot is cast,
    Through wilds and forests let me range;
My joys shall pomp and power outlast—
    The voice of nature cannot change.

———————

A soberer feeling through the crowd he flung,
Clermont was uppermost on every tongue;
But who can live on unavailing sighs?
The inconsolable are not the wise.
Spirit, and youth, and worth, demand a tear—
That day was past, and sorrow was not here;
Sorrow the contest dared not but refuse
'Gainst Oakly's open cellar and the muse.
    Sir Ambrose cast his eye along the line,
Where many a cheerful face began to shine,
And, fixing on his man, cried, loud and clear,
'What have you brought, John Armstrong? let us hear.'
Forth stepp'd his shepherd;—scanty locks of grey
Edged round a hat that seem'd to mock decay;
Its loops, its bands, were from the purest fleece,
Spun on the hills in silence and in peace.
A staff he bore carved round with birds and flowers,
The hieroglyphics of his leisure hours;
And rough form'd animals of various name,
Not just like Bewick's, but they meant the same.
Nor these alone his whole attention drew,
He was a poet,—this Sir Ambrose knew,—
A strange one too;—and now had penn'd a lay,
Harmless and wild, and fitting for the day.
No tragic tale on stilts;—his mind had more
Of boundless frolic than of serious lore;—
Down went his hat, his shaggy friend close by
Dozed on the grass, yet watch'd his master's eye.

THE SHEPHERD'S DREAM:
OR, FAIRIES' MASQUERADE

I had folded my flock, and my heart was o'erflowing,
I loiter'd beside the small lake on the heath;
The red sun, though down, left his drapery glowing,
And no sound was stirring, I heard not a breath:
I sat on the turf, but I meant not to sleep,
And gazed o'er that lake which for ever is new,
Where clouds over clouds appear'd anxious to peep
From this bright double sky with its pearl and its blue.

Forgetfulness, rather than slumber, it seem'd,
When in infinite thousands the fairies arose
All over the heath, and their tiny crests gleam'd
In mock'ry of soldiers, our friends and our foes.
There a stripling went forth, half a finger's length high,
And led a huge host to the north with a dash;
Silver birds upon poles went before their wild cry,
While the monarch look'd forward, adjusting his sash.

Soon after a terrible bonfire was seen,
The dwellings of fairies went down in their ire,
But from all I remember, I never could glean
Why the woodstack was burnt, or who set it on fire.
The flames seem'd to rise o'er a deluge of snow,
That buried its thousands,—the rest ran away;
For the hero had here overstrain'd his long bow,
Yet he honestly own'd the mishap of the day.

Then the fays of the north like a hailstorm came on,
And follow'd him down to the lake in a riot,
Where they found a large stone which they fix'd him upon,
And threaten'd, and coax'd him, and bade him be quiet.
He that conquer'd them all, was to conquer no more,
But the million beheld he could conquer alone;
After resting awhile, he leap'd boldly on shore,
When away ran a fay that had mounted his throne.

'Twas pleasant to see how they stared, how they scamper'd,
By furze-bush, by fern, by no obstacle stay'd,
And the few that held council, were terribly hamper'd,
For some were vindictive, and some were afraid.
I saw they were dress'd for a masquerade train,
Colour'd rags upon sticks they all brandish'd in view,
And of such idle things they seem'd mightily vain,
Though they nothing display'd but a bird split in two.

Then out rush'd the stripling in battle array,
And both sides determined to fight and to maul:
Death rattled his jawbones to see such a fray,
And glory personified laugh'd at them all.
Here he fail'd,—hence he fled, with a few for his sake,
And leap'd into a cockle-shell floating hard by;
It sail'd to an isle in the midst of the lake,
Where they mock'd fallen greatness, and left him to die.

Meanwhile the north fairies stood round in a ring,
Supporting his rival on guns and on spears,
Who, though not a soldier, was robed like a king;
Yet some were exulting, and some were in tears.
A lily triumphantly floated above,
The crowd press'd, and wrangling was heard through the whole;
Some soldiers look'd surly, some citizens strove
To hoist the old nightcap on liberty's pole.

But methought in my dream some bewail'd him that fell,
And liked not his victors so gallant, so clever,
Till a fairy stepp'd forward, and blew through a shell,
'Bear misfortune with firmness, you'll triumph for ever.'
I woke at the sound, all in silence, alone,
The moor-hens were floating like specks on a glass,
The dun clouds were spreading, the vision was gone,
And my dog scamper'd round 'midst the dew on the grass.

I took up my staff, as a knight would his lance,
And said, 'Here's my sceptre, my baton, my spear,
And there's my prime minister far in advance,
Who serves me with truth for his food by the year.'

So I slept without care till the dawning of day,
Then trimm'd up my woodbines and whistled amain;
My minister heard as he bounded away,
And we led forth our sheep to their pastures again.

———————

Scorch'd by the shadeless sun on Indian plains,
Mellow'd by age, by wants, and toils, and pains,
Those toils still lengthen'd when he reach'd that shore
Where Spain's bright mountains heard the cannons roar,
A pension'd veteran, doom'd no more to roam,
With glowing heart thus sung the joys of home.

THE SOLDIER'S HOME

My untried muse shall no high tone assume,
Nor strut in arms; farewell my cap and plume:
Brief be my verse, a task within my power,
I tell my feelings in one happy hour;
But what an hour was that! when from the main
I reach'd this lovely valley once again!
A glorious harvest fill'd my eager sight,
Half shock'd, half waving in a flood of light;
On that poor cottage roof where I was born
The sun look'd down as in life's early morn.
I gazed around, but not a soul appear'd,
I listen'd on the threshold, nothing heard;
I call'd my father thrice, but no one came;
It was not fear or grief that shook my frame,
But an o'erpowering sense of peace and home,
Of toils gone by, perhaps of joys to come.
The door invitingly stood open wide,
I shook my dust, and set my staff aside.
How sweet it was to breathe that cooler air,
And take possession of my father's chair!
Beneath my elbow, on the solid frame,
Appear'd the rough initials of my name,

Cut forty years before!—the same old clock
Struck the same bell, and gave my heart a shock
I never can forget. A short breeze sprung,
And while a sigh was trembling on my tongue,
Caught the old dangling almanacks behind,
And up they flew, like banners in the wind;
Then gently, singly, down, down, down, they went,
And told of twenty years that I had spent
Far from my native land:—that instant came
A robin on the threshold; though so tame,
At first he look'd distrustful, almost shy,
And cast on me his coal-black stedfast eye,
And seem'd to say (past friendship to renew)
'Ah ha! old worn-out soldier, is it you?'
Through the room ranged the imprison'd humble bee,
And bomb'd, and bounced, and struggled to be free,
Dashing against the panes with sullen roar,
That threw their diamond sunlight on the floor;
That floor, clean sanded, where my fancy stray'd
O'er undulating waves the broom had made,
Reminding me of those of hideous forms
That met us as we pass'd the Cape of Storms,
Where high and loud they break, and peace comes never;
They roll and foam, and roll and foam for ever.
But here was peace, that peace which home can yield;
The grasshopper, the partridge in the field,
And ticking clock, were all at once become
The substitutes for clarion, fife, and drum.
While thus I mused, still gazing, gazing still
On beds of moss that spread the window sill,
I deem'd no moss my eyes had ever seen
Had been so lovely, brilliant, fresh, and green,
And guess'd some infant hand had placed it there,
And prized its hue, so exquisite, so rare.
Feelings on feelings mingling, doubling rose,
My heart felt every thing but calm repose;
I could not reckon minutes, hours, nor years,
But rose at once, and bursted into tears;
Then, like a fool, confused, sat down again,
And thought upon the past with shame and pain;

I raved at war and all its horrid cost,
And glory's quagmire, where the brave are lost.
On carnage, fire, and plunder, long I mused,
And cursed the murdering weapons I had used.
Two shadows then I saw, two voices heard,
One bespoke age, and one a child's appear'd.—
In stepp'd my father with convulsive start,
And in an instant clasp'd me to his heart.
Close by him stood a little blue-eyed maid,
And, stooping to the child, the old man said,
'Come hither, Nancy, kiss me once again,
This is your uncle Charles, come home from Spain.'
The child approach'd, and with her fingers light,
Stroked my old eyes, almost deprived of sight.—
But why thus spin my tale, thus tedious be?
Happy old Soldier! what's the world to me?

Change is essential to the youthful heart,
It cannot bound, it cannot act its part
To one monotonous delight a slave;
E'en the proud poet's lines become its grave:
By innate buoyancy, by passion led,
It acts instinctively, it will be fed.
A troop of country lasses paced the green,
Tired of their seats, and anxious to be seen;
They pass'd Sir Ambrose, turn'd, and pass'd again,
Some lightly tripp'd, to make their meaning plain:
The old man knew it well, the thoughts of youth
Came o'er his mind like consciousness of truth,
Or like a sunbeam through a lowering sky,
It gave him youth again, and ecstacy;
He joy'd to see them in this favourite spot,
Who of fourscore, or fifty score, would not?
He wink'd, he nodded, and then raised his hand,—
'Twas seen and answer'd by the Oakly band.
Forth leap'd the light of heart and light of heel,
E'en stiff limb'd age the kindling joy could feel.

They form'd, while yet the music started light;
The grass beneath their feet was short and bright,
Where thirty couple danced with all their might.
The Forester caught lasses one by one,
And twirl'd his glossy green against the sun;
The Shepherd threw his doublet on the ground,
And clapp'd his hands, and many a partner found:
His hat-loops bursted in the jocund fray,
And floated o'er his head like blooming May.
Behind his heels his dog was barking loud,
And threading all the mazes of the crowd;
And had he boasted one had wagg'd his tail,
And plainly said, 'What can my master ail?'
To which the Shepherd, had he been more cool,
Had only said, ''Tis Oakly feast, you fool.'
    But where was Philip, he who danced so well?
Had he retired, had pleasure broke her spell?
No, he had yielded to a tend'rer bond,
He sat beside his own sick Rosamond,
Whose illness long deferr'd their wedding hour;
She wept, and seem'd a lily in a shower;
She wept to see him 'midst a crowd so gay,
For her sake lose the honours of the day.
But could a gentle youth be so unkind?
Would Philip dance, and leave his girl behind?
She in her bosom hid a written prize,
Inestimably rich in Philip's eyes;
The warm effusion of a heart that glow'd
With joy, with love, and hope by Heaven bestow'd.
He woo'd, he soothed, and every art assay'd,
To hush the scruples of the bashful maid,
Drawing, at length, against her weak command,
Reluctantly the treasure from her hand:
And would have read, but passion chain'd his tongue,
He turn'd aside, and down the ballad flung;
And paused so long from feeling and from shame,
That old Sir Ambrose halloo'd him by name:
'Bring it to me, my lad, and never fear,
I never blamed true love, or scorn'd a tear;
They well become us, e'en where branded most.'

He came, and made a proxy of his host,
Who, as the dancers cooling join'd the throng,
Eyed the fair writer as he read her song.

ROSAMOND'S SONG OF HOPE

Sweet Hope, so oft my childhood's friend,
    I will believe thee still,
For thou canst joy with sorrow blend,
    Where grief alone would kill.

When disappointments wrung my heart,
    Ill brook'd in tender years,
Thou, like a sun, perform'dst thy part,
    And dried my infant tears.

When late I wore the bloom of health,
    And love had bound me fast,
My buoyant heart would sigh by stealth
    For fear it might not last.

My sickness came, my bloom decay'd,
    But Philip still was by;
And thou, sweet Hope, so kindly said,
    'He'll weep if thou should'st die.'

Thou told'st me too, that genial Spring
    Would bring me health again;
I feel its power, but cannot sing
    Its glories yet for pain.

But thou canst still my heart inspire,
    And Heaven can strength renew;
I feel thy presence, holy fire!
    My Philip will be true.

All eyes were turn'd, all hearts with pity glow d,
The maid stood trembling, and the lover bow'd
As rose around them, while she dried her tears,
'Long life to Rosamond, and happy years!'
Scarce had the voices ceased, when forth there came
Another candidate for village fame:
By gratitude to Heaven, by honest pride,
Impell'd to rise and cast his doubts aside,
A sturdy yeoman, button'd to the throat,
Faced the whole ring, and shook his leathern coat.
'I have a tale of private life to tell,
'Tis all of self and home, I know it well;
In love and honour's cause I would be strong,
Mine is a father's tale, perhaps too long,
For fathers, when a duteous child's the theme,
Can talk a summer's sun down, and then dream
Of retrospective joys with hearts that glow
With feelings such as parents only know.'

ALFRED AND JENNET

Yes, let me tell of Jennet, my last child;
In her the charms of all the rest ran wild,
And sprouted as they pleased. Still by my side,
I own she was my favourite, was my pride,
Since first she labour'd round my neck to twine,
Or clasp'd both little hands in one of mine:
And when the season broke, I've seen her bring
Lapfuls of flowers, and then the girl would sing
Whole songs, and halves, and bits, O, with such glee!
If playmates found a favourite, it was she.
Her lively spirit lifted her to joy;
To distance in the race a clumsy boy
Would raise the flush of conquest in her eye,
And all was dance, and laugh, and liberty.
Yet not hard-hearted, take me right, I beg,
The veriest romp that ever wagg'd a leg
Was Jennet; but when pity soothed her mind,
Prompt with her tears, and delicately kind.
The half-fledged nestling, rabbit, mouse, or dove,

By turns engaged her cares and infant love;
And many a one, at the last doubtful strife,
Warm'd in her bosom, started into life.
    At thirteen she was all that Heaven could send,
My nurse, my faithful clerk, my lively friend;
Last at my pillow when I sunk to sleep,
First on my threshold soon as day could peep:
I heard her happy to her heart's desire,
With clanking pattens, and a roaring fire.
Then, having store of new-laid eggs to spare,
She fill'd her basket with the simple fare,
And weekly trudged (I think I see her still)
To sell them at yon house upon the hill.
Oft have I watch'd her as she stroll'd along,
Heard the gate bang, and heard her morning song;
And, as my warm ungovern'd feelings rose,
Said to myself, 'Heaven bless her! there she goes.'
Long would she tarry, and then dancing home,
Tell how the lady bade her oft'ner come,
And bade her talk and laugh without control;
For Jennet's voice was music to the soul,
My tale shall prove it:—For there dwelt a son,
An only child, and where there is but one,
Indulgence like a mildew reigns, from whence
Mischief may follow if that child wants sense.
But Alfred was a youth of noble mind,
With ardent passions, and with taste refined:
All that could please still courted heart and hand,
Music, joy, peace, and wealth, at his command;
Wealth, which his widow'd mother deem'd his own;
Except the poor, she lived for him alone.
Yet would she weep by stealth when he was near,
But check'd all sighs to spare his wounded ear;
For from his cradle he had never seen
Soul-cheering sunbeams, or wild nature's green.
But all life's blessings centre not in sight;
For Providence, that dealt him one long night,
Had given, in pity to the blooming boy,
Feelings more exquisitely tuned to joy.
Fond to excess was he of all that grew;

The morning blossom sprinkled o'er with dew,
Across his path, as if in playful freak,
Would dash his brow, and weep upon his cheek;
Each varying leaf that brush'd where'er he came,
Press'd to his rosy lip he call'd by name;
He grasp'd the saplings, measured every bough,
Inhaled the fragrance that the spring months throw
Profusely round, till his young heart confess'd
That all was beauty, and himself was bless'd.
Yet when he traced the wide extended plain,
Or clear brook side, he felt a transient pain;
The keen regret of goodness, void of pride,
To think he could not roam without a guide.
Who, guess ye, knew these scenes of home delight
Better than Jennet, bless'd with health and sight?
Whene'er she came, he from his sports would slide,
And catch her wild laugh, listening by her side;
Mount to the tell-tale clock with ardent spring,
And feel the passing hour, then fondly cling
To Jennet's arm, and tell how sweet the breath
Of bright May-mornings on the open heath;
Then off they started, rambling far and wide,
Like Cupid with a wood-nymph by his side.
Thus months and months roll'd on, the summer pass'd,
And the long darkness, and the winter blast,
Sever'd the pair; no flowery fields to roam,
Poor Alfred sought his music and his home.
What wonder then if inwardly he pined?
The anxious mother mark'd her stripling's mind
Gloomy and sad, yet striving to be gay
As the long tedious evenings pass'd away:
'Twas her delight fresh spirits to supply.—
My girl was sent for—just for company.
A tender governess my daughter found,
Her temper placid, her instruction sound;
Plain were her precepts, full of strength, their power
Was founded on the practice of the hour:
Theirs were the happy nights to peace resign'd,
With ample means to cheer th' unbended mind.
The Sacred History, or the volumes fraught

With tenderest sympathy, or towering thought,
The laughter-stirring tale, the moral lay,
All that brings dawning reason into day.
There Jennet learn'd by maps, through every land
To travel, and to name them at command;
Would tell how great their strength, their bounds how far,
And show where uncle Charles was in the war.
The globe she managed with a timid hand,
Told which was ocean, which was solid land,
And said, whate'er their diff'rent climates bore,
All still roll'd round, though that I knew before.
Thus grown familiar, and at perfect ease,
What could be Jennet's duty but to please?
Yet hitherto she kept, scarce knowing why,
One powerful charm reserved, and still was shy.
When Alfred from his grand-piano drew
Those heavenly sounds that seem'd for ever new,
She sat as if to sing would be a crime,
And only gazed with joy, and nodded time.
Till one snug evening, I myself was there,
The whispering lad inquired, behind my chair,
'Bowman, can Jennet sing?' 'At home,' said I,
'She sings from morn till night, and seems to fly
From tune to tune, the sad, the wild, the merry,
And moulds her lip to suit them like a cherry;
She learn'd them here.'—'O ho!' said he, 'O ho!'
And rubb'd his hands, and stroked his forehead, so.
Then down he sat, sought out a tender strain,
Sung the first words, then struck the chords again;
'Come, Jennet, help me, you must know this song
Which I have sung, and you have heard so long.'
I mark'd the palpitation of her heart,
Yet she complied, and strove to take a part,
But faint and fluttering, swelling by degrees,
Ere self-composure gave that perfect ease,
The soul of song:—then, with triumphant glee,
Resting her idle work upon her knee,
Her little tongue soon fill'd the room around
With such a voluble and magic sound,
That, 'spite of all her pains to persevere,

She stopp'd to sigh, and wipe a starting tear;
Then roused herself for faults to make amends,
While Alfred trembled to his fingers' ends.
But when this storm of feeling sunk to rest,
Jennet, resuming, sung her very best,
And on the ear, with many a dying fall,
She pour'd th' enchanting 'Harp of Tara's Hall.'
Still Alfred hid his raptures from her view,
Still touch'd the keys, those raptures to renew,
And led her on to that sweet past'ral air,
The Highland Laddie with the yellow hair.
She caught the sound, and with the utmost ease
Bade nature's music triumph, sure to please:
Such truth, such warmth, such tenderness express'd,
That my old heart was dancing in my breast.
Upsprung the youth, 'O Jennet, where's your hand?
There's not another girl in all the land,
If she could bring me empires, bring me sight,
Could give me such unspeakable delight:
You little baggage! not to tell before
That you could sing; mind you go home no more.'
    Thus I have seen her from my own fire-side
Attain the utmost summit of her pride;
For, from that singing hour, as time roll'd round,
At the great house my Jennet might be found,
And, while I watch'd her progress with delight,
She had a father's blessing every night,
And grew in knowledge at that moral school
Till I began to guess myself a fool.
Music! why she could play as well as he!
At least I thought so,—but we'll let that be:
She read the poets, grave and light, by turns,
And talk'd of Cowper's 'Task,' and Robin Burns;
Nay, read without a book, as I may say,
As much as some could with in half a day.
'Twas thus I found they pass'd their happy time,
In all their walks, when nature in her prime
Spread forth her scents and hues, and whisper'd love
And joy to every bird in every grove;
And though their colours could not meet his eye,

She pluck'd him flowers, then talk'd of poetry.
Once on a sunbright morning, 'twas in June,
I felt my spirits and my hopes in tune,
And idly rambled forth, as if t' explore
The little valley just before my door;
Down by yon dark green oak I found a seat
Beneath the clustering thorns, a snug retreat
For poets, as I deem'd, who often prize
Such holes and corners far from human eyes;
I mark'd young Alfred, led by Jennet, stray
Just to the spot, both chatting on their way:
They came behind me, I was still unseen;
He was the elder, Jennet was sixteen.
My heart misgave me, lest I should be deem'd
A prying listener, never much esteem'd,
But this fear soon subsided, and I said,
'I'll hear this blind lad and my little maid.'
That instant down she pluck'd a woodbine wreath,
The loose leaves rattled on my head beneath;
This was for Alfred, which he seized with joy,
'O, thank you, Jennet,' said the generous boy.
Much was their talk, which many a theme supplied,
As down they sat, for every blade was dried.
I would have skulk'd away, but dare not move,
'Besides,' thought I, 'they will not talk of love;'
But I was wrong, for Alfred, with a sigh,
A little tremulous, a little shy,
But, with the tenderest accents, ask'd his guide
A question which might touch both love and pride.
'This morning, Jennet, why did you delay,
And talk to that strange clown upon your way,
Our homespun gardener? how can you bear
His screech-owl tones upon your perfect ear?
I cannot like that man, yet know not why,
He's surely quite as old again as I;
He's ignorant, and cannot be your choice,
And ugly too, I'm certain, by his voice,
Besides, he call'd you pretty.'—'Well, what then?
I cannot hide my face from all the men;
Alfred, indeed, indeed, you are deceived,

He never spoke a word that I believed;
Nay, can he think that I would leave a home
Full of enjoyment, present, and to come,
While your dear mother's favours daily prove
How sweet the bonds of gratitude and love?
No, while beneath her roof I shall remain,
I'll never vex you, never give you pain.'
'Enough, my life,' he cried, and up they sprung;
By Heaven, I almost wish'd that I was young;
It was a dainty sight to see them pass,
Light as the July fawns upon the grass,
Pure as the breath of spring when forth it spreads,
Love in their hearts, and sunshine on their heads.
Next day I felt what I was bound to do,
To weigh the adventure well, and tell it too;
For Alfred's mother must not be beguiled,
He was her earthly hope, her only child;
I had no wish, no right to pass it by,
It might bring grief, perhaps calamity.
She was the judge, and she alone should know
Whether to check the flame or let it grow.
I went with fluttering heart, and moisten'd eye,
But strong in truth, and arm'd for her reply.
'Well, master Bowman, why that serious face?'
Exclaim'd the lovely dame, with such a grace,
That had I knelt before her, I had been
Not quite the simplest votary ever seen.
I told my tale, and urged that well-known truth,
That the soft passion in the bloom of youth
Starts into power, and leads th' unconscious heart
A chase where reason takes but little part;
Nothing was more in nature, or more pure,
And from their habits nothing was more sure.
Whether the lady blush'd from pride or joy,
I could but guess;—at length she said—'My boy
Dropp'd not a syllable of this to me!
What was I doing, that I could not see?
Through all the anxious hours that I have known,
His welfare still was dearer than my own;
How have I mourn'd o'er his unhappy fate!

Blind as he is! the heir to my estate!
I now might break his heart, and Jennet's too;
What must I, Bowman, or what can I do?'—
'Do, madam?' said I, boldly, 'if you trace
Impending degradation or disgrace
In this attachment, let us not delay;
Send my girl home, and check it while you may.'
'I will,' she said, but the next moment sigh'd;
Parental love was struggling hard with pride.
I left her thus, deep musing, and soon found
My daughter, for I traced her by the sound
Of Alfred's flageolet; no cares had they,
But in the garden bower spent half the day.
By starts he sung, then wildest trillings made,
To mock a piping blackbird in the glade.
I turn'd a corner and approach'd the pair;
My little rogue had roses in her hair!
She whipp'd them out, and with a downcast look,
Conquer'd a laugh by poring on her book.
My object was to talk with her aside,
But at the sight my resolution died;
They look'd so happy in their blameless glee,
That, as I found them, I e'en let them be;
Though Jennet promised a few social hours
'Midst her old friends, my poultry, and my flowers.
She came,—but not till fatal news had wrung
Her heart through sleepless hours, and chain'd her tongue.
She came, but with a look that gave me pain,
For, though bright sunbeams sparkled after rain,
Though every brood came round, half run, half fly,
I knew her anguish by her alter'd eye;
And strove, with all my power, where'er she came,
To soothe her grief, yet gave it not a name.
At length a few sad bitter tears she shed,
And on both hands reclined her aching head.
'Twas then my time the conqueror to prove,
I summon'd all my rhetoric, all my love.
'Jennet, you must not think to pass through life
Without its sorrows, and without its strife;
Good, dutiful, and worthy, as you are,

You must have griefs, and you must learn to bear.'
Thus I went on, trite moral truths to string,—
All chaff, mere chaff, where love has spread his wing:
She cared not, listen'd not, nor seem'd to know
What was my aim, but wiped her burning brow,
Where sat more eloquence and living power
Than language could embody in an hour.
With soften'd tone I mention'd Alfred's name,
His wealth, our poverty, and that sad blame
Which would have weigh'd me down, had I not told
The secret which I dare not keep for gold,
Of Alfred's love, o'erheard the other morn,
The gardener, and the woodbine, and the thorn;
And added, 'Though the lady sends you home,
You are but young, child, and a day may come'—
'She has not sent me home,' the girl replied,
And rose with sobs of passion from my side;
'She has not sent me home, dear father, no;
She gives me leave to tarry or to go;
She has not blamed me,—yet she weeps no less,
And every tear but adds to my distress;
I am the cause,—thus all that she has done
Will bring the death or misery of her son.
Jealous he might be, could he but have seen
How other lads approach'd where I have been;
But this man's voice offends his very soul,
That strange antipathy brooks no control;
And should I leave him now, or seem unkind,
The thought would surely wreck his noble mind;
To leave him thus, and in his utmost need!
Poor Alfred! then you will be blind indeed!
I will not leave him.'—'Nay, child, do not rave,
What, would you be his menial, be his slave?'
'Yes,' she exclaim'd, and wiped each streaming eye,
'Yes, be his slave, and serve him till I die;
He is too just to act the tyrant's part,
He's truth itself.' O how my burthen'd heart
Sigh'd for relief!—soon that relief was found;
Without one word we traced the meadow round,
Her feverish hand in mine, and weigh'd the case,

Nor dared to look each other in the face;
Till, with a sudden stop, as if from fear,
I roused her sinking spirit, 'Who comes here?'
Down the green slope before us, glowing warm,
Came Alfred, tugging at his mother's arm;
Willing she seem'd, but he still led the way,
She had not walk'd so fast for many a day;
His hand was lifted, and his brow was bare,
For now no clust'ring ringlets wanton'd there,
He threw them back in anger and in spleen,
And shouted 'Jennet' o'er the daisied green.
Boyish impatience strove with manly grace
In ev'ry line and feature of his face;
His claim appear'd resistless as his choice,
And when he caught the sound of Jennet's voice,
And when with spotless soul he clasp'd the maid,
My heart exulted while my breath was staid.
'Jennet, we must not part! return again;
What have I done to merit all this pain?
Dear mother, share my fortune with the poor,
Jennet is mine, and shall be—say no more;
Bowman, you know not what a friend I'll be;
Give me your daughter, Bowman, give her me;
Jennet, what will my days be if you go?
A dreary darkness, and a life of woe:
My dearest love, come home, and do not cry;
You are my daylight, Jennet, I shall die.'
To such appeals all prompt replies are cold,
And stately prudence snaps her cobweb hold.
Had the good widow tried, or wish'd to speak,
This was a bond she could not, dared not break;
Their hearts (you never saw their likeness, never)
Were join'd, indissolubly join'd for ever.
Why need I tell how soon our tears were dried,
How Jennet blush'd, how Alfred with a stride
Bore off his prize, and fancied every charm,
And clipp'd against his ribs her trembling arm;
How mute we seniors stood, our power all gone?
Completely conquer'd, Love the day had won,
And the young vagrant triumph'd in our plight,

And shook his roguish plumes, and laugh'd outright.
Yet, by my life and hopes, I would not part
With this sweet recollection from my heart;
I would not now forget that tender scene
To wear a crown, or make my girl a queen.
Why need be told how pass'd the months along,
How sped the summer's walk, the winter's song,
How the foil'd suitor all his hopes gave up,
How Providence with rapture fill'd their cup?
No dark regrets, no tragic scenes to prove,
The gardener was too old to die for love.
A thousand incidents I cast aside
To tell but one—I gave away the bride—
Gave the dear youth what kings could not have given;
Then bless'd them both, and put my trust in Heaven.
There the old neighbours laugh'd the night away,
Who talk of Jennet's wedding to this day.
And could you but have seen the modest grace,
The half-hid smiles that play'd in Jennet's face,
Or mark'd the bridegroom's bounding heart o'erflow,
You might have wept for joy, as I could now:
I speak from memory of days long past;
Though 'tis a father's tale, I've done at last.

———————

Here rest thee, rest thee, Muse, review the scene
Where thou with me from peep of dawn hast been:
We did not promise that this motley throng
Should every one supply a votive song,
Nor every tenant:—yet thou hast been kind,
For untold tales must still remain behind,
Which might o'er listening patience still prevail,
Did fancy waver not, nor daylight fail.
'The Soldier's Wife,' her toils, his battles o'er,
'Love in a Shower,' the riv'let's sudden roar;
Then, 'Lines to Aggravation' form the close,
Parent of murders, and the worst of woes.
But while the changeful hours of daylight flew,

Some homeward look'd, and talk'd of evening dew;
Some watch'd the sun's decline, and stroll'd around,
Some wish'd another dance, and partners found;
When in an instant every eye was drawn
To one bright object on the upper lawn;
A fair procession from the mansion came,
Unknown its purport, and unknown its aim.
No gazer could refrain, no tongue could cease,
It seem'd an embassy of love and peace.
Nearer and nearer still approach'd the train,
Age in the van transform'd to youth again.
Sir Ambrose gazed, and scarce believed his eyes;
'Twas magic, memory, love, and blank surprise,
For there his venerable lady wore
The very dress which, sixty years before,
Had sparkled on her sunshine bridal morn,
Had sparkled, ay, beneath this very thorn!
Her hair was snowy white, o'er which was seen,
Emblem of what her bridal cheeks had been,
A twin red rose—no other ornament
Had pride suggested, or false feeling lent;
She came to grace the triumph of her lord,
And pay him honours at his festive board.
Nine ruddy lasses follow'd where she stepp'd;
White were their virgin robes, that lightly swept
The downy grass; in every laughing eye
Cupid had skulk'd, and written 'victory.'
What heart on earth its homage could refuse?
Each tripp'd, unconsciously, a blushing Muse.
A slender chaplet of fresh blossoms bound
Their clustering ringlets in a magic round.
And, as they slowly moved across the green,
Each in her beauty seem'd a May-day queen.
The first a wreath bore in her outstretch'd hand,
The rest a single rose upon a wand;
Their steps were measured to that grassy throne
Where, watching them, Sir Ambrose sat alone.
They stopp'd,—when she, the foremost of the row,
Curtsied, and placed the wreath upon his brow;
The rest, in order pacing by his bower,

In the loop'd wreath left each her single flower,—
Then stood aside.—What broke the scene's repose?
The whole assembly clapp'd their hands and rose.
The Muses charm'd them as they form'd a ring,
And look'd the very life and soul of Spring!
But still the white hair'd dame they view'd with pride,
Her love so perfect, and her truth so tried.
Oh, sweet it is to hear, to see, to name,
Unquench'd affection in the palsied frame—
To think upon the boundless raptures past,
And love, triumphant, conquering to the last!
Silenced by feeling, vanquish'd by his tears,
The host sprung up, nor felt the weight of years;
Yet utterance found not, though in virtue's cause,
But acclamations fill'd up nature's pause,
Till, by one last and vigorous essay,
His tide of feeling roll'd itself away;
The language of delight its bondage broke,
And many a warm heart bless'd him as he spoke.
'Neighbours and friends, by long experience proved,
Pardon this weakness; I was too much moved:
My dame, you see, can youth and age insnare,
In vain I strove, 'twas more than I could bear,—
Yet hear me,—though the tyrant passions strive,
The words of truth, like leading stars, survive;
I thank you all, but will accomplish more,—
Your verses shall not die as heretofore;
Your local tales shall not be thrown away,
Nor war remain the theme of every lay.
Ours is an humbler task, that may release
The high-wrought soul, and mould it into peace.
These pastoral notes some victor's ear may fill,
Breathed amidst blossoms, where the drum is still:
I purpose then to send them forth to try
The public patience, or its apathy.
The world shall see them; why should I refrain?
'Tis all the produce of my own domain.
Farewell!' he said, then took his lady's arm,
On his shrunk hand her starting tears fell warm;
Again he turn'd to view the happy crowd,

And cried, 'Good night, good night, good night,' aloud,
'Health to you all! for see, the evening closes,'
Then march'd to rest, beneath his crown of roses.
'Happy old man! with feelings such as these,
The seasons all can charm, and trifles please.'
An instantaneous shout re-echoed round,
'Twas wine and gratitude inspired the sound:
Some joyous souls resumed the dance again,
The aged loiter'd o'er the homeward plain,
And scatter'd lovers rambled through the park,
And breathed their vows of honour in the dark;
Others a festal harmony preferr'd,
Still round the thorn the jovial song was heard;
Dance, rhymes, and fame, they scorn'd such things as these,
But drain'd the mouldy barrel to its lees,
As if 'twere worse than shame to want repose:
Nor was the lawn clear till the moon arose,
And on each turret pour'd a brilliant gleam
Of modest light, that trembled on the stream;
The owl awoke, but dared not yet complain,
And banish'd silence re-assumed her reign.

SONGS FROM HAZELWOOD HALL (1823)

GLEE FOR THREE VOICES

Love in a show'r safe shelter took
In a rosy bow'r beside a brook,
And wink'd and nodded, with conscious pride
To his votaries, drench'd on the other side;
'Come hither, sweet maids, there's a bridge below,
The toll-keeper, Hymen, will let you through—
    Come over the stream to me.'

Then over they went in a huddle together,
Not caring much about wind or weather;
The bow'r was sweet, and the show'r was gone,
Again broke forth th'enlivening sun;
Some wish'd to return, but the toll-keeper said,
'You're a wife now, lassy, I pass'd you a maid;
    Get back as you can for me!'

SIMPLE PLEASURES

Thus thinks the trav'ler, journeying still,
    Where mountains rise sublime;
What but these scenes the heart can fill,
What charm like yonder giant hill?
    —A molehill clothed with thyme.

What can exceed the joy of pow'r?
    —That joy which conquerors prove
In sceptred rule—where all must cow'r;
What can exceed that mad'ning hour?
    —Why, peace—and home—and love!

THE FLOWERS OF THE MEAD (?1824)

How much to be wish'd that the flowers of the mead
    The pleasures of converse could yield;
And be to our bosoms, wherever we tread,
    The reasoning sweets of the field!

But silent they stand,—yet in silence bestow,
    What smiles, and what glances impart;
And give, every moment, Joy's exquisite glow,
    And the powerful throb of the heart.

FROM THE BIRD AND INSECT'S POST-OFFICE (1824)

LETTER V.
FROM AN EARWIG, DEPLORING THE LOSS OF ALL HER CHILDREN

Dear Aunt,

You cannot think how distressed I have been, and still am; for, under the bark of a large elm, which, I dare say, has stood there a great while, I had placed my whole family, where they were dry, comfortable, and, as I foolishly thought, secure. But only mark what calamities may fall upon earwigs before they are aware of them! I had just got my family about me, all white, clean, and promising children; when pounce came down that bird they call a woodpecker; when, thrusting his huge beak under the bark where we lay, down went our whole sheltering roof! and my children, poor things, running, as they thought, from danger, were devoured as fast as the destroyer could open his beak and shut it. For my own part, I crept into a crack in the solid tree, where I have thus far escaped; but as this bird can make large holes into solid timber, I am by no means safe.

This calamity is the more heavy, as it carries with it a great disappointment; for very near our habitation was a high wall, the sunny side of which was covered with the most delicious fruits; peaches, apricots, nectarines, &c. all just then ripening; and I thought of having such a feast with my children as I had never enjoyed in my life.

I am surrounded by wood-peckers, jack-daws, magpies, and other devouring creatures, and think myself very unfortunate. Yet, perhaps, if I could know the situation of some larger creatures—I mean particularly such as would tread me to death if I crossed their path—they may have complaints to make as well as I.

Take care of yourself, my good old aunt, and I shall keep in my hiding-place as long as starvation will permit. And, after all, perhaps the fruit was not so delicious as it looked—I am resolved to think so, just to comfort myself.

Yours, with compliments, as usual.

[THE AUTHOR'S EPITAPH]

First made a Farmer's Boy, and then a snob,
A poet he became, and here lies Bob.
April 1823

NOTES

Notes which appear to be by Bloomfield himself are marked 'RB'.

The Farmer's Boy Text: Poems (1809).

Letter to George Bloomfield, from the Preface to Poems (1809), Volume I.

I made it longer than I first intended. 'The parts of the poem first composed, before any thought was entertained of going through with the Seasons, were the morning scene in Spring, beginning "This task had Giles," and the description of the lambs at play. And if it be lawful for an author to tell his opinion, they have never lost an inch of ground in my estimation from that day to this.' (RB, footnote).

Spring

37 Grafton Augustus Henry Fitzroy, third duke of Grafton (1735-1811), Bloomfield's patron.

38 Euston Euston Hall, near Thetford, West Suffolk, seat of the Dukes of Grafton (and the setting for 'The Fakenham Ghost'). See Brayley, Views in Suffolk, 1806, pp. 27-9.

223 Gibeonite A slave. The inhabitants of Gibeon were condemned by Joshua to be hewers of wood and drawers of water (Joshua, 9: 21).

250 Orwell...Weveny...Ouse Rivers in East Anglia.

254 "Three-times-skim'd Sky-blue" Thin, watery milk which has been thoroughly skimmed and so has a bluish tinge to it. Suffolk cheese was notorious for its thin, hard quality, caused by skimming all the cream off the milk first to supply butter to the capital. This also made the cheese especially durable, and it was widely used in naval rations, the subject of bitter complaint by the sailors. See N. A. M. Rodger, The Wooden World: An Anatomy of the Georgian Navy (London: Fontana, 1988).

Autumn

91 new-brier'd Possibly as a protection against body-snatchers.

110 lovely Poll 'Mary Raynor of Ixwirth Thorp' (RB, MS note); 'In the description of the Mad Girl I had originally called her Poll; but on my visit to Suffolk, after an absence of twelve years... I learned that her name was Ann. I conversed with her, and found her greatly recovered, and sensible of her past calamity' (RB, in Poems, 1809, I, p. xxxvii). See also Brayley, Views in Suffolk, p. 36.

238 Howard John Howard (1726?-1790), philanthropist and prison reformer. Compare Thomson's praise of a 'generous band' of earlier prison reformers in The Seasons (1726-30; 'Winter', ll. 359-61).

260 Euston...Fitzroy See notes to 'Spring', ll. 37-8, above.
288 view hallo A shout given by a huntsman on seeing a fox break cover.
332 "Foxes, rejoice! here buried lies your foe." 'Inscribed on a stone in Euston Park wall' (RB).

Winter
37 beetle 'An implement consisting of a heavy weight or "head," usually of wood, with a handle or stock, used for driving wedges or pegs, ramming down paving stones, or for crushing, bruising, beating, flattening or smoothing, in various industrial and domestic operations, and having various shapes according to the purpose for which it is used' (OED, 'beetle', 1).
153-212 Compare John Clare's two poems, 'The Death of Dobbin' and 'Death of Dobbin', Early Poems, ed. Eric Robinson, David Powell, and P.M.S. Dawson (Oxford, 1989), I, p. 84 and II, p. 630.
334 teeming Ewes Pregnant sheep; one of several phrases borrowed from John Dyer, The Fleece (1757), I, l. 489, the principal literary source for shepherding description in the poem.

Rural Tales Text: Poems (1809), except for the Preface from Rural Tales (1802).
Preface to Poems (1809), Volume II: "Miller's Maid" This poem is not included in the present edition.

Richard and Kate
2 orts Leftovers, usually of food, but here probably meaning remnants of wool from Kate's spinning.
29-30 Wall...Band...Lucks...Twitches 'Terms used in spinning' (1802). 'Wall' is presumably a variant of 'whorl', the weight on a spindle which acts as the pulley when it is mounted to a spinning-wheel. The 'band' is the driving belt between the wheel and the spindle. 'Lucks' are small portions of wool, twisted on the finger of the spinner of the distaff. 'Twitches' are pieces of wood wound round the forefinger of the left hand from which yarn is spun. See Eliza Leadbetter, Spinning and Spinning Wheels (Princes Risborough, Aylesbury: Shire Publications, 1979), pp. 3-4; Joseph Wright, The English Dialect Dictionary (London: Henry Frowde, 1898-1905), III, p. 683 and VI, p. 289.
31 Hutch 'a chest' (RB).
45 Mawther A girl.
50 Gotch 'a pitcher' (RB).
83 Dicky Races Donkey races.
92 High-lows Boots which cover the ankles.

94 kedge Brisk, lively, in good spirits.

The Fakenham Ghost 'This Ballad is founded on a fact. The circumstance occurred perhaps long before I was born; but is still related by my Mother, and some of the oldest inhabitants in that part of the country.' (RB).

Winter Song

12 We'll make him at home to a pin 'In or to a merry pin; almost drunk: an allusion to a sort of tankard, formerly used in the north, having silver pegs or pins set at equal distances from the top to the bottom: by the rules of good fellowship, every person drinking out of one of these tankards was to swallow the quantity contained between two pins; if he drank more or less, he was to continue drinking till he ended at a pin: by this means persons unaccustomed to measure their draughts were obliged to drink the whole tankard. Hence when a person was a little elevated with liquor, he was said to have drunk to a merry pin.' Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, (1811). Thanks to Hugh Underhill for this reference. See also OED, 'pin,' sb. 1, 15.

Good Tidings; or, News from the Farm Text: Poems (1809). This text is four lines shorter than the first edition of 1804; details of this and other substantive variants are noted below. Bloomfield's original title for the poem was 'The Vaccine Rose' (see note to l. 126).

Thomson The heading quotation is from James Thomson (1700-1748), 'To The Memory Of The Right Hon. Lord Talbot', ll. 365-8.

1 so admirably fair] so lovely and so fair (1804).

39 and Summer's countless dies so lovely to his eyes (1804).

91 May that] Here that (1804).

93 May all] Here all (1804).

99 Montagu Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (1689-1762), poet and writer. In 1716 she travelled with her husband to Constantinople, where she saw inoculation practiced. A survivor of smallpox herself, she became on her return an energetic campaigner for inoculation, winning many supporters including members of the royal family, and defying intense hostility from some quarters. See The Turkish Embassy Letters, ed. Malcolm Jack (London: Virago, 1993.

106 by the Severn side Edward Jenner's first work on vaccination was carried out at his practice in Berkeley, Gloucestershire, near the river Severn, a river often used by poets to evoke the 'georgic' values associated with the border region of 'Siluria' through which it flows. (Cf. 'Spring,' l. 264.)

111 Though wise] Doubt and (1804).
112 What, when] But when (1804).
126 Rose A poetic image of the blister raised in the vaccinated arm.
140 bow'rs of roses 'The first medical account of the small-pox is given by the Arabian physicians, and is traced no farther back than the siege of Alexandria, about the year of Christ 640?Woodville' (RB).
142 eternal snows 'First introduced into Greenland in 1732, and almost depopulated the country?Ibid. ' (RB).
144 his giant bulk uprears] hath dropp'd his seeming tears (1804).
145 He, in his strength, while toll'd the] Hath shook his head for many a (1804).
146 Rejoic'd] And wept (1804).
151 full power] At length (1804)
152 Ambition's sons to dare the ocean] Th'ambitious wings to cross the western (1804).
154 Peru 'In 1540, says Mr, Woodville, when the small-pox visited New Spain, it proved fatal to one half of the people in the provinces to which the infection extended; being carried thither by a negro slave, who attended Narvaez in his expedition against Cortes. He adds, about fifty years after the discovery of Peru, the small-pox was carried over from Europe to America by way of Carthegena, when it overran the Continent of the New World, and destroyed upwards of 100,000 Indians in the single province of Quito?Hist. of Inoculation' (RB).
159 thou] oh! (1804).
171 life's silent sand Cf. 'The Widow to Her Hour-glass,' l. 11, 'streaming sand'.
173 interdicted Forbidden.
162 1804 has the following additional lines between 162 and 163:
And Alder-groves, and many a flow'ry lea
Still winding onward to the northern sea,
166 1804 has the following additional lines between 166 and 167:
And haply still a flatt'ring prospect drew,
'Twas well,—but there are days of trouble too.
175 widow'd] fated (1804).
176 And] The (1804).
177 The helping neighbour, for her] She, who had helped the sick with (1804).
178 that] a (1804).
182 (No sense of danger mars an infant's dream) (1804).
183 all exclaim'd, and with a pitying] ev'ry tongue exprest, and ev'ry (1804).

206 approv'd] have crowned (1804).
224 another son 'I had proceeded thus far with the Poem, when the above fact became a powerful stimulus to my feelings, and to the earnestness of my exhortation' (RB).
231 Reason, Pity, Joy, arise] Reason, leagu'd with Pity, fly (1804).
252 The mother's feelings kindling] Should rouse the mother's feelings (1804).
259 Man knows and feels its truth] Nor less the wish of man (1804).
299 their chiefs 'The chiefs of the Cherokee Indians, in North America, have applied to the government of the United States for information on the subject of Vaccine Inoculation, and have spread the practice in the Woods' (RB).
308 Candian Alluding to the territories of Kandy, in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka), the arena for intermittent territorial skirmishes between British and Sinhalese forces in the period.
311-12 These lines are reversed in 1804.
330 within a boat's length of the shore 'So lately as the year 1793, the small-pox was carried to the Isle of France by a Dutch ship, and there destroyed five thousand four hundred persons in six weeks? Woodville' (RB).
345 among] amongst (1804).
348 his son 'Lee Boo, second son of the King of the Pelew Islands, was brought to England by Capt. Wilson, and died of the Small-pox, at Rotherhithe, in 1784' (RB).
353 To all mankind, to all the earth 'tis] To error's reign a loud alarm is (1804).
284 thine] thy (1804).

Song sung by Mr Bloomfield Text: Remains (1824), I, pp. 49-50.
To His Wife Text: Remains (1824), I, pp. 18-19.
To a Spindle Text: Remains (1824), I, pp. 20-3. A 'paralytic affection' (see the prose introduction) is a stroke.

Wild Flowers Text: Poems (1809), except for the Preface from Wild Flowers (1806). Bloomfield replaced the latter in the 1809 edition with the following short 'Advertisement': 'To continue the former Preface in this volume of "Wild Flowers" would be unnecessary: but the Dedication, because it cannot give offence, or disgust the reader, may be worthy of preservation.'

To My Old Oak Table

75 that vast gigantic dome St Paul's Cathedral, London: compare Dickens's description at the end of chapter 19 of Bleak House, 'Moving On'.

The Horkey Note: we have preserved the original italics, which Bloomfield uses to emphasise the energy of dialect speech.

5 Judie Twitchet '[She] was a real person, who lived many years with my mother's cousin Bannock, at Honington' (RB, in Wild Flowers (1806), p. 33)).

25 hake 'A sliding pot-hook' (RB).

43 cop't 'Thrown' (RB).

63 sitch a mort 'Such a number' (RB).

89 My Lord 'The leader of the reapers' (RB).

123 gran'd 'Strangled' (RB).

133 spirket 'An iron hook' (RB).

157 for the nonce 'For the purpose' (RB).

162 shanny-pated 'Giddy, thoughtless' (RB).

165 skriggl'd 'To struggle quickly' (RB).

167 quack'ling 'Choaking' (RB).

The Broken Crutch

57-78 Compare John Clare's poems against enclosure, especially 'The Lamentations of Round Oak Waters' and 'To a Fallen Elm'.

90 'Burnt-Hall' Near Fakenham, 'a moated eminence, formerly the site of a mansion supposed to have been destroyed by fire' (Brayley, Views in Suffolk, pp. 43-44).

268 suck'd a charming portion with a reed Used a hollow reed as a drinking straw to siphon off enough wedding-ale ('a charming portion') to become intoxicated.

Shooter's Hill Note: Shooter's Hill is near Woolwich, south-east London, on the old London to Dover high road. It commands 'a most extensive and variegated prospect, overlooking as large a city and as fine a country as any in the universe' (Brayley, Views in Suffolk, p. 53). It was a favourite destination for artisan outings in the period.

26 Erith's ivied spire The parish church of Erith, Kent, between Woolwich and Dartford on the south bank of the Thames, formerly a place of maritime importance, later a resort for Londoners.

60 Surry-Hills The North Downs.

64 romantic Mole The river Mole, flowing northwest through Sussex and Surrey to meet the Thames at East Molesey, opposite Hampton Court.

65 Aye, there's the scene! 'Box-Hill, and the beautiful neighbourhood of Dorking, in Surry' (RB).

89 monumental tower The triangular Tower at the summit of Shooter's Hill, commemorating the achievements of Sir William James (1721-83), who conquered the castle of Severndroog on the coast of Malabar, the stronghold of the pirate Angria, on 2 April 1755, part of 'a train of exploits of the highest moment to our mercantile transactions with the eastern world' (Brayley, Views in Suffolk, p. 53).

91 Angria's subjugated power See previous note. The first edition and the manuscript (British Library, Add. MS 28266, f. 29v) both have 'Angra'.

Barnham Water

32 The mighty 'City in the East.' Thetford, Norfolk, an ancient town on the Icknield Way, capital of Saxon East Anglia, occupied by the Danes in 865, burnt by Sweyn in 1004, a bishopric from 1070 to 1094. It boasted at one time eight monasteries, including a famous Cluniac priory founded by Roger Bigod (d. 1107) in 1104. See Brayley, Views in Suffolk, pp. 31-3.

41 Danish mounds Earthworks raised by the invading Danes in 865.

55-56 Bigods...Mowbrays...Framlingham Framlingham Castle, Suffolk, now a ruin, was given to Roger Bigod (see note to l. 32), and became the principal stronghold of his descendants the Bigods, Mowbrays and Howards, earls and dukes of Norfolk.

The Banks of Wye

Preface to The Banks of Wye Text: first edition, 1811.

a party of my good friends In a letter to his wife dated 16 August 1807 (Hart, no. 43), Bloomfield names the party as 'Mr. and Mrs. [Thomas Lloyd] Baker and self, Mr. [Robert Bransby] Cooper, and two daughters and two sons, with Miss Ewen, the governess'.

Advertisement to the Second Edition Text: corrected second edition, 1813.

The Lady whose name appears in the Dedication Mrs Mary Lloyd Baker.

The Banks of Wye Book III Text: corrected second edition, 1813.

11 Llandenny, and Llansoy Villages to the south of Raglan, Monmouthshire.

22 the last flag of loyalty 'This castle, with a garrison commanded by the Marquis of Worcester, was the last place of strength which held out for the unfortunate Charles the First' (RB). Henry Somerset (1576/7-1646), first marquess of Worcester, garrisoned and held Raglan Castle for the Royalists through one of the longest sieges of the English Civil War. His final surrender to Cromwell's forces and their demolition of much of the Castle, was one of the last events of the Civil War.

30 pride of arms 'These magnificent ruins, including the citadel, occupy a tract of ground not less than one-third of a mile in circumference.' 'In addition to the injury the castle sustained from the parliamentary army, considerable dilapidations have been occasioned by the numerous tenants in the vicinity, who conveyed away the stone and other materials for the construction of farm-houses, barns, and other buildings. No less than twenty-three staircases were taken down by these devastators; but the present Duke of beaufort no sonner succeedded to his estate, than he instantly gave orders that not a stone should be moved from it situation, and thus preserved these noble ruins from destruction.' (RB, quoting from [David Williams'] History of Monmouthshire [1796], p. 148)

50 Yellow Tower The Great Tower, the most striking feature of Raglan Castle.

52 superstition's dream 'A village woman, who very officiously pointed out all that she knew respecting the former state of the castle, desired us to remark the descent to a vault, apparently of large dimensions, in which she had heard that no candle would continue burning; 'and,' added she, 'they say it is because of the damps; but for my part, I think the devil is there.' (RB)

66 Pen-y-Vale The mountain to the north of Abergavenny, also known as the Sugar Loaf, that Bloomfield's party would climb the next day.

87 mountaineer 'The driver, Powell, I believe, occupied a cottage or small farm, which we past during the ascent, and where goats' milk was offered for refreshment.' (RB).

145 Burns Robert Burns (1759-1796), Scotland's national poet, was an inspiring figure for labouring-class poets like Bloomfield and Clare, often associated, as here, with a democratic ideal of (in Milton's words) 'mountain liberty'.

154 'Bonny Doon' ... 'Balloch Mile.' The river Doon and the village of Ballochmyle, Ayrshire, locations celebrated in Burns's songs 'The Banks o' Doon' and 'The Bonnie Lass o' Ballochmile'.

165 Pen-y-vale 'The respective heights of these mountains above the mouth of the Gavany, was taken barometrically by Gen. Roy.

	Feet.
The summit of the Sugar-Loaf	1852
Of the Blorenge	1720
Of the Skyrid	1492' (RB).

177 Talliesen Taliesin, archetypal ancient Welsh bard.

188 holy fame 'There still remains, on the summit of the Skyrid, or St. Michael's Mount, the foundation of an ancient chapel, to which the inhabitants formerly ascended on Michaelmas Eve, in a kind of pilgrimage. A prodigious cleft, or separation in the hill, tradition says, was caused by the earthquake at the crucifixion, it was therefore termed the Holy Mountain' (RB).

203 'This hill commands a view of the counties of Radnor, Salop, Brecknock, Glamorgan, Hereford, Worcester, Gloucester, Somerset, and Wilts.' (RB)

274 'In [Theophilus] Jones's History of Brecknockshire [1805], the castle of Abergavenny is noticed as having been the scene of the most shocking enormities.' (RB)

319 Pembroke 'Part of the original palace of the powerful Earls of Pembroke is still undemolished by time.' (RB)

348 An hundred 'Jane Edwards, or as she pronounced it, Etwerts, a tall, bony, upright woman, leaning both hands on the head of her stick, and in her manners venerably impressive, was then at the age of one hundred. She was living in 1809, then one hundred and two.' (RB)

Song ['The Man in the Moon'] Text: Remains, I, pp. 59-60 (verse numbers omitted)

Tune.—Ligoran Cosh An Irish jig. Francis O'Neill in Waifs and strays of Gaelic melody (second enlarged edition, Chicago: Lyon and Healy, c. 1922), traces this tune to 'Aird's Selections 1782-97'. Its correct Gaelic title is 'Ligrum Cus' ('Let go my foot'). According to O'Neill (a Chicago police captain who traced Irish tunes from recent immigrants in the 1920s) the title 'may also relate to the rent question'. For this information we are indebted to the late Barry Bloomfield, and to the Irish Traditional Folk Archive, 63 Merrion Square, Dublin 2. O'Neill gives the tune as follows:

Sonnet. To Fifteen Gnats... Text: Remains, I, p. 31.

Hob's Epitaph Text: Remains, I, pp. 33-4. 'Hob' is a familiar form of Robert or Robin, often used to indicate either a rustic bumpkin, or a hobgoblin, puck or Robin Goodfellow. This 'Hob' seems to be a wizard's familiar.

4 exciseman An officer employed to collect excise duty and prevent evasion of duty. Bloomfield no doubt intends a topical satirical reference to one or more of the (highly unpopular) measures to raise the excise on alcoholic drinks in the early nineteenth century. Cf. 'The Invitation,' ll. 127-30 and 210, in May-Day with the Muses.

9 gauging Ascertaining the content or capacity of a cask by measurement and calculation. In Bloomfield's time the main concern was with curbing the common practice of watering beers and spirits, tested by taking their specific gravity.

12 supervisor A Supervisor of the Excise, who would oversee and check the records of lower-ranking excise officers.

May-Day with the Muses Text: first edition, 1822.

Preface

T. Park Thomas Park (1759-1834), antiquary, bibliographer and poet, whom Bloomfield had known since at least 1801.

Cunningham's 'Kate of Aberdeen' Allan Cunningham (1784-1842), miscellaneous writer and friend to Hogg and Clare, wrote a number of popular 'old' Scottish ballads of this kind, some of which were included in R.H. Cromek's Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song (1810).

Dibdin's 'Sailor's Journal' Thomas John Dibdin (1771-1841), actor and dramatist, prolific writer and producer of popular plays, operas, poems and songs, many on patriotic themes.

The Invitation

38 Oakly Hall 'The seat of Sir Ambrose is situated in the author's imagination only; the reader must build Oakly Hall where he pleases' (RB).

209 its costly store Port wine, a luxury item imported from Portugal.

210 well tax'd See the note to 'Hob's Epitaph', l. 4, above.

211 Lusitanian mountains The mountains of Portugal (after the name of the Roman province of Lusitania which included the area of modern Portugal).

212 Gama The explorer Vasco Da Gama (c. 1469-1525) set off from Lisbon on his famous journey eastward on 8 July 1497.

227 domestics Indigenous plants.

The Drunken Father

496 Wilkie David Wilkie (1785-1841), painter: see Introduction.

The Forester

510 Old Salcey Forest An ancient royal forest covering 1,850 acres, a few miles south-east of Northampton.

579 Clermont's bowers Claremont, Esher, Surrey, where Princess Charlotte Augusta (1796-1817) died after giving birth to a still-born boy on 6 November 1817. See Stephen C. Behrendt, Royal Mourning and Regency Culture: Elegies and Memorials of Princess Charlotte (London: Macmillan, 1997).

622 Bewick's Thomas Bewick (1753-1828), wood-engraver. His illustrations of animals and birds include the engravings for the General History of Quadrupeds (1790), and the History of British Birds (1797 and 1804).

752 Cape of Storms An early name for the Cape of Good Hope, the southernmost point of Africa.

1037 'Harp of Tara's Hall.' 'Tara's Harp' from Thomas Moore's Irish Melodies, Vol. I (1808).

1041 Highland Laddie with the yellow hair 'The Yellow Haired Laddie', a traditional song, adapted by Allan Ramsay, among others.

1063 Cowper's 'Task,' William Cowper, 'The Task: A Poem in Six Books', first published in the second volume of his Poems (1785).

Hazelwood Hall (1823) Text: first edition, 1823.

'Glee for three voices' from Act II, Scene iii, p. 34.

'Simple Pleasures' from Act III, Scene iii, pp. 58-9. This title is from later editions of Bloomfield: in the text of Hazelwood Hall it is simply 'Air (Morrison).'

The Flowers of the Mead. Text: Remains, I, p. 39.

The Bird and Insect's Post-Office (1824) Text: Remains, II, pp. 139-41.

[The Author's Epitaph] This does not appear in the printed text, but we have taken it from the title page of the manuscript (British Library, Add. MS. 30809, f. 11).

1 snob Cobbler, shoemaker.

INDEX OF POETRY TITLES AND FIRST LINES