

Suliman is a PhD student at Nottingham Trent University (NTU) and a member of the Centre for Marine Ecological Resilience and Geological Resources (MERGeR). He holds a bachelor's degree (1994) and master's degree (1999) from Benghazi University. He also holds a PhD degree in Economics from Alhurra University and Cairo University (2010). His PhD focused on the role of stock markets in distributing wealth. He is now doing a second PhD in Accounting and Finance, with a focus on the impact of reserve and decommissioning disclosure on the value and performance of listed firms in the UK market.

Before starting his PhD at NTU, Suliman worked as a financial adviser at Mubasher Financial Services (United Arab of Emirates) and was chair of the Arab Federation of Exchange. He is the founder of Libyan Stock Market (2005) and has experience in the regulation of the investment and exchanges in the Arab World.

Suliman has also worked as Lecturer at Omer Al-Mukhtar University in Libya. He has published two books in personal finance and many academic papers on Accounting and Finance. He is also a Libyan economist writer in newspapers and in social media.
