Burglary and Security Project

Project Investigators

Graham Farrell

Graham Farrell is Professor and Research Chair in Environmental Criminology at the School of Criminology and Senior Research Fellow at the Institute for Canadian Urban Research Studies at Simon Fraser University. He was previously Deputy Research Director at the Police Foundation in Washington D.C, professor of criminology at Loughborough University, associate professor at the University of Cincinnati, and visiting assistant professor at Rutgers University. He completed his PhD in 1993 at the University of Manchester and was a Research Associate at the University of Oxford then an International Expert at the United Nations in Vienna. In 2007/8 he conducted fieldwork in Afghanistan to evaluate progress in United Nations projects to improve the criminal justice system. He has directed research projects funded by sources including the US Department of Justice, the Canadian Department of Public Safety and Emergency Management, the Economic and Social Research Council, the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, and the European Community, and has worked with police forces in Canada, the UK and the US, as well as with Interpol and the World Customs Organization. His research covers many areas of security and crime science, policing, and crime prevention and he has published or edited 15 books and monographs, and over 100 other research studies. Details of Graham's extensive work can be found at: http://www.sfu.ca/criminology/facstaff/faculty-directory.html.html

Louise Grove

Louise Grove is Senior Lecturer in Criminology and Social Policy at Loughborough University where she leads the Crime Science Research Group, and is Co-Director of the Policing Research Group. She completed her PhD on repeat victimisation in 2010 at Loughborough University, and subsequently developed the research into a systematic review published by the Swedish National Council for Crime Prevention.

Currently holding funding from the Economic and Social Research Council and the Higher Education Innovation Fund; previous work has been supported by English Heritage, Loughborough University Development Trust and the Enterprise Projects Group. She has worked with multiple police forces, charities and universities exploring issues around crime prevention, victimisation, and heritage crime. Her recent book Heritage Crime: Progress, Prospects and Prevention, edited with Dr Suzie Thomas of the University of Helsinki, was launched at the British Academy in December 2014 to an audience of high level practitioners, policy makers, and academics. You can see a full publication list and get in touch with Louise at www.louisegrove.com.

Nick Tilley, OBE

Nick Tilley is a professor in the Department of Security and Crime Science, where he is the Director of the UCL Security Science Research Training Centre. He is also Emeritus Professor of Sociology at Nottingham Trent University. He was seconded to the Home Office to undertake research there from 1992-2003. He was an advisor to the Government Office for the East Midlands from 2003-2008. He was awarded an OBE in the Queen's Birthday Honours list in 2005 for services to Policing and Crime Reduction. He was elected to the Academy of the Social Sciences (AcSS)in 2009. Details of Nick's extensive contribution can be found at: http://www.ucl.ac.uk/scs/people/academic-research-staff/nick-tilley

Andromachi Tseloni

Andromachi Tseloni is currently Professor of Quantitative Criminology at Loughborough University. Her research, published in academic journals, edited books chapters and reports, revolves around four broad themes: criminal victimisation inequalities; crime perceptions; the crime drop; and social capital. Her recent book on individual and contextual protective and risk factors of single and repeat criminal victimisation, Using modelling to predict and prevent victimisation (Springer, 2014) co-authored with Professor Ken Pease (UCL), reflects the practical application of her work, currently under development with Higher Education Innovation Funding. Her research has been supported by the American Statistical Association, the Home Office, Police departments and others. She currently leads two Economic and Social Research Council grants on burglary security and acquaintance and stranger violence, and contributes to a Knowledge Transfer Partnership between the Nottingham Crime and Drugs Partnership and Police Crime Commissioner and the Nottingham Trent University on shoptheft. She Chairs the Crime and Justice Statistics Network, a specialist network of the British Society of Criminology and she is newly appointed Treasurer of the British Society of Criminology. More information about Andromachi's work can be found at: http://www.lboro.ac.uk/departments/socialsciences/staff/academicandresearch/tseloniandromachi.html

